Stimulants Given To Combat Illness

Rallies After Getting Medicine; Appears Greatly Fatigued.

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, Dec. 15.—Pope Pius' breath came with difficulty tonight after he suffered a relapse from the ailments which have kept him in bed for 10 days, Vatican sources said.

The setback in the previous improvement of the 79-year-old Pontiff—whose legs are partly paralyzed and who also suffers from the infirmities of old age—was understood to have been brought on by his increased exertions today.

Dr. Amanti Milani, his physician, gave him a heart stimulant and His Holiness rallied somewhat, but even then he seemed to feel great fatigue, Vatican informants declared.

Tonight he was still depressed, and Dr. Milani and other attendants pleaded that he conserve his strength carefully.

The Holy Father spent several hours sitting in an armchair and received three persons—his secretary of state, Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli; the governor of Vatican City, Commendatore Camillo Serafini, and Domenico Cardinal Jorio.

Prior to his relapse, the congestion of the Pope's circulatory system was said by Vatican officials to have improved, as the result of his remaining quiet most of the time.

Pius was annoyed on reading lengthy reports of his illness in European newspapers, as he had given instructions that his sickness be kept quiet, a well-informed source declared.

Walsh to Form Lawyers' Guild

New York, Dec. 15.—In revolt against what he termed "the reactionary minority" within the legal profession, Frank P. Walsh, an attorney and chairman of the New York Power Authority, announced today formation of a National Lawyers Guild.

Walsh, one of the organizers, said the guild would be organized formally at a convention in Washington on February 22. He added there are at present between 2,000 and 3,000 members, but said he expected a membership of 5,000 by the time of the Washington meeting.

He said the guild is "not in competition with any other association," but that guild organizers felt the more liberal element among lawyers was not now sufficiently represented. The American Bar Association now is considered the principal representative of organized lawyers.

Walsh, a leader of the Progressive National Committee, which campaigned for President Roosevelt's re-election, listed as among lawyers who had aligned themselves with the guild, Jerome Frank, a Reconstruction Finance Corporation attorney; Charlton Ogburn, attorney to the American Federation of Labor, and Henry T. Hunt, of Washington, former Mayor of Cincinnati.

U. S.-British Bond Hailed by Baldwin

London, Dec. 15 (AP). — Great Britain and the United States "have a common bond, namely a democratic system," Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin declared tonight at the first dinner meeting of a committee of members of Parliament formed unofficially to further understanding with America.

The man who won over the desire of former King Edward VIII for marriage as King, with American-born Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, continued:

"Uninformed criticism on both sides is useless and might do a great deal of harm. Rather should we pull together for the ideals we both hold."

Western Air Head Believes Plane Down at Isolated Airport, Radio Disabled; Gladys Witt, Who Couldn't Choose Swain, Is Stewardess.

By the Associated Press.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 15.—An airliner carrying seven persons, including Gladys Witt, the stewardess whose recent romance was widely publicized, was missing tonight in the treacherous terrain of central Utah—many hours overdue on a regular flight from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City.

Alvin Adams, president of the Western Air Express, said he believed the airliner, carrying four passengers and two pilots in addition to Miss Witt, was down at an isolated airport in the snow-rimmed area, its radio not working.

The first report possibly connected with the missing ship came from Ray Spor, airport manager at Delta. He said he heard a plane before 4 a. m. (mountain standard time). The ship was due in Salt Lake at 4:10 a. m.

At 3:27 a. m., Pilot S. J. Samson radioed he was at an altitude of 10,000 feet with "high overcast" near Milford, 90 miles southwest of Delta.

This last direct word from the ten-passenger, twin-motored (Boeing) plane said it was rocketing northward toward Utah's capital at 200 miles an hour.

Searchers on foot and in automobiles worked out of Milford and Delta. One plane, dispatched from

Wallace Asks Crop Control Be Tightened

Foresees Big Surpluses; Expects 10% Increase in Food Prices.

British Trade Treaty Near, Farm Surety Studied, He Adds.

By Felix Bruner.

While asserting agriculture is "out of the red," Secretary Wallace in his annual report to President Roosevelt yesterday stressed the need for stronger crop control measures in the future to cope with expected excesses of production.

In his report, and later at a press conference, Wallace revealed:

That he expects an increase of about 10 per cent next year in the price of food.

That progress is being made toward a reciprocal trade agreement with Great Britain.

That farm benefit payments, now about $1,000,000 a day, are expected to reach $2,000,000 a day by January 1.

That the second largest wheat acreage in the history of the country has been planted in the West.

That he and his assistants who have been studying crop insurance will recommend to President Roosevelt within about a week a plan whereby the farmer will bear the principal cost of the insurance.

Meanwhile, in a speech in Bakersfield, Calif., C. W. Kitchen, assistant chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, declared that the net income of farmers as a group is the highest in 17 years.

Present System Inadequate.

Wallace said in his report that probably in a year of good crops the present soil conservation plan would not be adequate. He said that return of normal weather "would revive the problems of agricultural surpluses." He said a long-term plan must "achieve soil conservation, consumer protection and crop control together."

Among the measures which Wallace said must be taken was a solution of the farm tenancy problem. His special committe on farm tenancy will hold its first meeting today. W. L. Blackstone, of Wynne, Okla., a tenant farmer, has been made chairman of the committee.

In announcing that progress is being made toward a reciprocal agreement with Great Britain, Wallace pointed out that last year one-half of all agricultural products exclusive of cotton went to the United Kingdom.

In this connection Wallace denied that his recent speech in Pasadena, Calif., in which he urged farmers to turn their attention from Europe to the Western Hemisphere indicated he had become an isolationist. The speech, he said, was inspired to a large extent by the Institute of Public Opinion poll recently published in The Post indicating that 63 per cent of the farmers favored an American League of Nations.

Wallace, in discussing the wheat crop, said that he had not studied the cause for the sudden rise in prices Monday. Wheat was only slightly lower yesterday.

Wallace said that 77,000,000 acres of wheat have been planted, the largest acreage since 1919, the record year. This acreage is sufficient, he said, under good conditions to yield a 1,000,000,000-bushel crop, but he predicted weather conditions would bring it far below this figure.

In connection with the crop insurance report, Wallace said that it would be recommended that farmers should pay for "pure risks" and that the Government contribution should cover overhead and storage. He declined to amplify the plan.

In discussing food prices, Wallace said in his report that the supply will be about 3 per cent below that of the present year and about 5 per cent below the 1925-29 average.

He pointed out that in a comparable situation after the 1934 drought food prices went up 11 per cent.

"Food," he added, "constitutes only about one-third of total living costs, hence an increase of, say, 10 per cent in the cost of food tends to produce a rise in total living costs of only about 3 per cent."

Wallace reported that the gross agricultural income in 1936 was $9,200,000,000, compared with a low of $5,337,000,000 in 1932, and with $11,941,000,000 in 1929.

The Secretary said that "scarcity never was intended and never approached" in the Administration farm program.

Edward Plans Sharp Reply To His Critic

Friends Report He Will Rebuke Canterbury in Answer.

By the United Press.

Enzesfeld, Austria (Wednesday), Dec. 16.—Edward, Duke of Windsor, plans a "literally devastating" reply to the Archbishop of Canterbury's radio attack on the "King's circle," persons in close touch with the former British monarch, said today.

There was disagreement, however, on the form of Edward's reply to the Archbishop's remarks that when he was King he moved in a "social circle whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best instincts and traditions of all his people." All agreed he will make "a reply which will be literally devastating."

One of the Prince's associates said the reply will be verbal, while others held "he will ask his brother and successor, George VI, to vindicate him and teach Canterbury a lesson in his capacity as head of the Anglican Church after his coronation."

Edward's Austrian friends said the archbishop's attack "surprised and angered Edward because he assumed that once he was removed from British public life, officials of both church and state would respect his position as a private person and leave him in peace."

Despite the strong statements of the former monarch's friends, it was believed the duke will not act until he is reunited with Mrs. Wallis Simpson, for whom he relinquished his throne. He is convinced that certain persons wish to stop the marriage by preventing the former Baltimore beauty's divorce decree nisi from becoming absolute next April 27. For that reason, it was said he will avoid "playing into their hands" by antagonizing them at this time.

The duke was represented as feeling the archbishop's remarks were more damaging to himself and the church than to the duke and Mrs. Simpson.

The duke said he never would regret giving up his throne for "the woman I love," and that he had nothing but the kindest feelings toward his brother, King George.

Canterbury Assailed.

London, Dec. 15 (AP).—Criticism from pulpit and the press was heaped upon the Archbishop of Canterbury today for his verbal chastisement of former King Edward VIII.

Indications were that the matter would reach the floor of the House of Commons on Thursday.

The latest repercussions of Edward's abdication embarrassed an officialdom that was striving to smooth the path for his successor, George VI.

The Archbishop, head of the Church of England and spiritual leader of the empire, in a broadcast on Sunday sternly lectured the former ruler for his desire to marry Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson in violation of the "Christian principles of marriage."

Scornfully, he placed part of the blame for the King's conduct at the feet of Edward's social friends, "whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best interests of his people."

Strong dissent with the Archbishop's statements came today from church circles and was reflected in editorial comment and letters from the public to newspapers.

Josiah Clement Wedgwood, Labor member of Parliament, said he

Chaos Is Predicted for China Following Capture of Chiang

Petty Warlords Expected to Create Conflict With Demands for New Territory; Japan, Germany May Use Incident for Attack on 'Communists.'

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.
Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

Shanghai, (Wednesday), Dec. 16.—The capture by mutineers of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, virtual dictator of the Chinese Nationalist government, is certain to give rise to a most serious crisis throughout China and to intensify foreign rivalries which are already acute here.

The abduction of the leader who during the last decade has done so much to unify China, will inevitably be followed by major internal reprecussions. The probable storm centers are widely scattered. They include:

The far southwest, still smarting from the extension of Chiang's control last summer; the semi-autonomous provinces of northern China, where Japan is steadily strengthening her grip; remote Szechuan, well on the way to Tibet, and half a dozen intermediate points where minor war lords will be stirred by present confusion to renewed activity.

From the viewpoint of the outside world, the crisis spells serious and immediate increase in the tempo of foreign antagonisms on the Chinese stage.

This totally unexpected development, precipitated by the relatively unimportant son of the former ruler of Manchuria, has stunned Tokyo as much as Nanking. Despite the breakdown of Sino-Japanese negotiations the Japanese government has hoped to reach a peaceful settlement of the many problems it has outstanding with China. With the latter country split internally, Japan will be forced to deal with numerous local administrations, some of which are openly hostile to Tokyo.

The appeal of Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang for the formation of a "popular front" against Japan went out to Communists as well as Nationalists. Japanese circles here apprehend a revival of active anti-Japanese movements in North China and elsewhere.

These apprehensions are the more vivid because it is now generally recognized that Japan is openly preparing for war against Russia. With Tokyo anxious to gain Chinese support, and to maintain the recent rapid development of Sino-Japanese trade, eclipse of the moderate and stable leadership of Chiang Kai-shek is seen as a

Kidnaped Leader Seen by Emissary

Radio Station Denies Chang Broadcast of Slaying.

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Wednesday), Dec. 16.—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek is alive and safe in Sianfu, although still a prisoner of Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang, a Nanking government spokesman announced today.

The spokesman specifically denied a Japanese News Agency report, circulated earlier this morning, that Marshal Chang, in a broadcast from the Sianfu radio station, had announced that he had executed the chief of the Nanking government because of Generalissmo Chiang's refusal to declare war on Japan.

Safety of the Nanking dictator, who was kidnaped by Marshal Chang Saturday, also was attested by W. L. Donald, Nanking emissary and former adviser to Marshal Chang, in a telegram to the United Press from Loyang.

Donald saw and talked to the generalissimo in Sianfu yesterday.

The Central Broadcasting Co., in Nanking, also denied the Japanese report of Marshal Chang's "execution" announcement, asserting that it made a verbatim copy of the marshal's broadcast and that there was no reference to execution of anybody in the statement.

[In Berlin, close friends of Chiang Kei-ko, son of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, said he understands that his father still is alive, the Associated Press reported. Young Chiang is a student at the University of Berlin.—Editor's note.]

Donald, who flew back to Loyang, in Honan Province, late yesterday, after his first conference with Marshal Chang, to report to Nanking by telephone, was to fly back to Sianfu today. He believed there was an excellent chance that he would be able to arrange Generalissimo Chiang's release within a few days.

The Nanking emissary, who was flying back and forth between Loyang and Sianfu in Marshal Chang's personal airplane, is a close friend of both Marshal Chang and his prisoner—the kidnaped generalissimo.

Donald told the United Press that "unless unforeseen difficulties arise, or Chiang Kai-shek's obstinacy influences the situation, a settlement of the crisis is likely within a few days."

Position Outlined.

He outlined Marshal Chang's position thus:

He is in agreement with Generalissimo Chiang in the necessity of opposing Japanese penetration of China, but believes that Chiang's policy is not vigorous enough.

He kidnaped Chiang on the advice of his colleagues of the old Manchurian army to force the generalissimo to oppose with force Japanese domination of China.

He demands a cessation of Chiang's anti-Communist campaign because he believes all China's resources should be concentrated on one front—against Japan.

He and his colleagues are ready to follow Chiang's leadership if Chiang will promise them to adopt a really vigorous opposition to Japan.

The government spokesman termed the report of the execution "malicious propaganda calculated to upset the gold bar exchange and other markets, and to disturb the public mind."

The official denial, made public at 8:10 a. m., followed hours of the wildest rumors, including a report by the Japanese Domei News Agency that Marshal Chang had made a personal radiocast from the Sian-fu station, stating that he had executed Generalissimo Chiang and all those seized with him because of the generalissimo's refusal to "declare war on Japan."

Shanghai Cheered.

The spokesman's statement cheered Shanghai as no news has done in years.

For five days—since the Nanking government admitted last Saturday that Generalissimo Chiang was a prisoner in the hands of the former Manchurian war lord—the whole country has been in suspense.

Rumors that Chiang was dead had been circulated hourly—many of them by speculators who hoped to influence prices in the great Shanghai markets.

President Met By Desk Piled With Big Tasks

Home After Peace Parley, He Finds 5 Major Jobs Awaiting Action.

By Sidney Olson.

His rich, red sunburn gleaming through the damp fog of a Washington evening, in strong contrast to the pale faces of his Cabinet members who met him, President Roosevelt arrived in Union Station last night, returning to the White House after a 28-day, 12,000-mile combined diplomatic and fishing trip to South America.

Fit and fresh for the coming hand-to-hand struggle with the highest-piled desk in the country, the President prepared for a stiff day's work after a brief morning funeral service for August (Gus) Gennerich, his faithful bodyguard, who died in Buenos Aires during the journey.

Gennerich's body, returned in state to this country on the President's cruiser, the Indianapolis, was received at the train by a local undertaker. After the funeral in the famous East Room today, the body will be taken to New York for services, with burial following in Middle Village, Long Island.

Major Problems Waiting.

The President faces a long series of chores of first-rank importance. These are:

1. The budget, for the fiscal year of 1937-38, to be prepared after final check-ups of agency needs.

2. The annual message to Congress on the state of the union, to report on his stewardship, and recommend legislation.

3. The inaugural address to the people.

4. The reorganization of the Federal agencies, for purposes of economy and efficiency.

5. The making of appointments for nearly a score of high government posts.

Gigantic Undertaking.

In the budget category, the President must determine how closely he can approach a balanced budget except for the extra relief appropriation, certain to be huge; and decide what bureaus can work efficiently on less appropriations than during the emergency period.

His state-of-the-Union message

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 15.—Charles R. Gay, president of the New York Stock Exchange, today expressed "concern" over recent increasingly heavy trading in low-priced shares.

"It's not my place to say whether the market is too high or too low, that's for buyers and sellers of stocks to decide for themselves—and the exchange is only the meeting place for orders, he said.

"But I don't like the looks of the recent flurry in stocks selling at a few dollars a share. That kind of activity in 'penny' stocks may mean the uninformed person is coming into the market, and that's a matter for concern."

"We all remember what the little fellow did in 1929. Without studying stock values, he took the bit in his teeth and, with a good many traders with large resources, ran away with the market.

Purchases for Cash.

"Over the past 18 months or so the stock market has gone ahead almost entirely under steam of cash purchases, and a lot of this buying seems to have come from investors who have carefully looked into companies they were putting their money in," he added.

Questioned whether he thought increased trading in low-priced issues implied careless buying, Gay said, "That may be so—a great many people have had pay increases, bonuses and extra dividends—and some of them may be stepping back into the market the way they did in 1929.

"Many stock buyers seem never to have got over the idea that a stock is a bargain just because its price is low," he said.

"I can't stress too much," he added, "the plain fact that just because a stock is selling at a low price is no guarantee it is cheap. A stock can be selling as low as $2 and still be the dearest security in the country."

"Make no mistake about it," he said, thumping a forefinger on his desk, "the right-minded people in Wall Street don't want to see the public rushing into securities with-

Frank Facing Ouster Today; Protests Grow

N. E. A. Wires La Follette in Defense of Head of Wisconsin U.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 15.—Educational circles of the Nation, stirred with a rare degree of unanimity, centered their interest today on this city, where the much-discussed career of Dr. Glenn Frank as president of the University of Wisconsin is threatened with forced termination.

While protests were pouring in from widespread centers, and a strike of perhaps 5,000 of the university's 10,000 students was being organized against the contemplated action, the university board of regents was preparing to dismiss the president tomorrow as the climax in a long-drawn-out controversy. A majority of the board, dominated by Governor Philip LaFollette, Progressive, was ready to end the 11-year service that has made Dr. Frank one of the best known figures in the school world.

The action has long been expected, though there has been a surprising lack of information on what specific charges form the basis for it. Friends of the Governor have contented themselves with saying that President Frank's inefficiency as an administrator precludes his being continued in charge of an institution on which the State spends $7,000,000 yearly. There have been administrative disputes within the institution, but none that assumed the importance that would lead to expectation that the president would be ousted because of them.

Politics Is Charged.

The charge of politics has been hurled most insistently on the part of Frank's supporters. They have intimated or charged that Gov. La Follette is seeking to punish Dr. Frank for his support of the Republican cause, that he feels the university head is seeking an opportunity to step into high political office from the academic post in the manner of Woodrow Wilson, or that he is seeking the school position for himself after his present term expires.

All these charges and intimations are laughed aside by LaFollette's supporters.

Loyalists Rout Rebels' Forces Outside Madrid

Defense Reports Germans Now in Forefront of Enemy Lines.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Dec. 15.—Government forces wiped out the rear guard of the Fascists attacking Madrid, while the insurgent commanders threw German troops into their front lines, defense officers declared tonight.

A government announcement said Gen. Francisco Franco's troops were whipped and "destroyed" in flank action at Fresnedillas, 25 miles west of Madrid.

The insurgents were lured almost to the Socialist line before the government militiamen launched a counter-assault with machine guns, mortars and rifles, and drove them back, the official statement asserted.

At the same time the Fascists were repulsed in an attack on Valdemorillo, east of Fresnedillas, the government said.

(This fighting in the rear of the Fascist besieging force was the first reported in some time. Most of the recent engagements have been in the outskirts of Madrid.)

Defense officers asserted they observed German troops in the front lines of the Fascists attacking Boadilla del Monte, about 9 miles west of the capital. The presence of the Germans, they said, was "duly checked."

The battle ebbed and flowed around the battered village, but the government said an insurgent advance had been beaten off and a counterattack had been started after guns were massed in that sector.

The fighting raged throughout the day in a vast area west of the capital, with the insurgents at Valdemorilla reported attempting to link themselves with those at Robledo de Chavela, who were said to be cut off from the important Fascist stronghold of El Escorial, northwest of Madrid.

14,000 Dead on Campus.

An all-British company was formed from the "international brigade" of foreigners who volunteered to fight for the defense of Madrid. Ralph Fox, a writer, was named head of the British unit.

A government announcement said the Fascists lost 14,000 men in the fighting in University City, the campus section of northwestern

Wheat at $1.35⅞, New Peak, Yields To Profit Taking

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—In the wheat market today December futures reached a new peak of $1.35⅞, but yielded later under heavy profit-taking sales. Rye emulated wheat in reaching fresh peak quotations.

The sharpest rally today in wheat prices followed word that Italy, the Orient and Germany had been moderate purchasers today from the Southern Hemisphere.

Several leading commission houses increased margin requirements on fresh commitments today because of advancing grain futures prices recently. Margins on December wheat and rye were advanced to 15 cents a bushel; December corn to 12 cents and December oats to 6 cents.

4,300 Stop Work In Glass Factory

Toledo, Ohio (Wednesday), Dec. 15 (AP).—Employes of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. plants here, numbering 4,300, staged a sit-down strike early today, simultaneously, Glen W. McCabe, president of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, said, with workers in the company's Shreveport (La.) and Charleston (W. Va.) plants.

Longshoremen Bar Strike Aid In East, Dismiss Coast Leader

By the United Press.

New York, Dec. 15.—The International Longshoremen's Association tonight refused to support the Eastern insurgent seamen's strike and discharged Harry Bridges, West Coast maritime leader, as organizer on the Pacific Coast.

The Atlantic District Council of the Union, led by President Joseph P. Ryan, voted unanimously to dismiss Bridges after he pleaded for three hours for support of the insurgent seamen's movement in Atlantic and Gulf ports.

"We are not paying anyone to disrup our organization," Ryan said.

The move split the union. Bridges, president of the Pacific Coast branch of the union, left immediately for Boston to address a longshoremen's meeting in an attempt to call out the men in defiance of Ryan's action.

Striking seamen, who invited Bridges to fly from San Francisco to appeal to longshoremen for strike support, said he would line up the Pacific branch in opposition to Ryan and begin to form a separate maritime federation.

In San Francisco negotiators had reached a "tentative accord" on a system of hiring, one of the strike's paramount issues. Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. Mc-

Kansas City Threat Spurs Vote Inquiry

Kansas City, Dec. 15 (AP).—A Federal grand jury pushed forward on a larger scale into Kansas City voting in the November election today despite a telephoned threat to Judge Albert L. Reeves, who ordered the investigation.

"I took it with a grain of salt," Judge Reeves said, in disclosing the threat.

The grand jury subpenaed the records of 14 precincts, additional to 16 it already had under scrutiny.

Judge Reeves said an unidentified caller, reaching him by telephone at his home last night, threatened him with physical violence if the inquiry was continued. The jurist had said the last registration of some 270,000 voters would call for a Kansas City population of 800,000, whereas it is less than 400,000.

Maxwell Case Will Go to Jurors Today at Wise; Judge to Limit Closing Arguments to 6 Hours

By Edward T. Folliard.
A Staff Correspondent.

Wise, Va., Dec. 15.—The case of Edith Maxwell, 22-year-old mountain school teacher, charged with killing Trigg Maxwell, her father, will go to the jury late tomorrow.

Testimony was completed today, and, to use a Cumberland Mountain expression, "speaking will start tomorrow morning." Judge Ezra T. Carter has allowed the prosecution and defense lawyers six hours to make their arguments.

Hoge Clements, venerable taxicab driver, who carries the newspaper reporters from Wise to the telegraph office in Norton, said today as he rolled over the mountains:

"I am a-telling you, they are never going to convict that girl again. It's going to be acquittal or a hung jury."

But another mountaineer, lounging outside the fortress-like courthouse, probably expounded more wisdom when he said:

"They're two things you never can tell about down in this country. You can't tell what a woman will do or a jury will do."

In her first trial, a jury of mountaineers found Edith guilty of first degree murder and sentenced her to 25 years in the Virginia State Penitentiary. Juries in this State not only determine the verdict but the punishment as well.

Here are the possible verdicts in the case of Edith Maxwell, who says she struck her father "a lick on the head" with a slipper while he, in a drunken rage, was beating her:

First degree murder: death in the electric chair, life imprisonment or a term in the penitentiary of not less than 20 years.

Second degree murder: five to 20 years in the penitentiary.

Voluntary manslaughter: one to five years in the penitentiary.

Involuntary manslaughter: A $5 fine to five years in the penitentiary.

Edith already has spent 14 months in jail, a fact which will be emphasized to the jury tomorrow by Charles Henry Smith, of Alexanis expected to include recommendations varying from renewal of such emergency powers, now soon to expire, as the devaluation of the dollar, and the concomitant $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, to the setting up of a new approach to the farm tenancy problem.

The inaugural message is expected to outline the general objectives of his second Administration, and the manner in which the New Deal expects to consolidate and preserve recovery gains, while attempting to check forces that might lead to another economic collapse.

Bureaus Are Wary.

The reorganization of the Government agencies, now being studied by a President's committee on administrative management, headed by Louis Brownlow, and a Senatorial committee, headed by Senator Harry Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, will be a major venture for the Government into an almost virgin jungle of intertwined, overlapping bureaus. Observers, pointing out that the whittling down of the vastly complicated, red-tape-entangled administrative set-up of the Government has never been more than half-heartedly attempted by any Administration, are reported watching closely the New Deal's try for an efficient, minimum-size Federal machine. Also watching closely are the scores of bureaus involved, of which many may be forced to prove the necessity of their existence.

The range of vacancies to be filled in the Administration is unusually wide. Not only is there expected to be a general Cabinet shake-up, but such posts remain to be filled as that of the Comptroller General, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of War, Undersecretary of State, Undersecretary of the Treasury, Minister to Denmark, High Commissioner to the Philippines, a vacancy on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors; five Maritime Commissioners, and on down through a number of smaller jobs, including the President's personal secretariat.

Changes Discussed.

In the swift revival of Washington activity that always accompanies the return of the President to town, the meeting yesterday in the office of Secretary of the Treasury Henry L. Morgenthau, jr., stood out. Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; John H. Fahey, chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board and Home Owners Loan Corporation, and W. I. Myers, chairman of the Farm Credit Administration, were present.

The group discussed legislation concerning the extension of the various Government agencies, including the RFC's expiration on February 1; the continuation of Federal insurance for home modernization loans, and the creation of a smaller, permanent Public Works Administration.

The possible revival of the NRA; the bill proposed by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, to require Federal licenses for corporations; the relief situation, and numerous smaller matters all must be studied by the President as Congress gathers for the opening session, January 5.

Carpenters Assail Industrial Unions

Lakeland, Fla., Dec. 15 (AP).—The United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America closed its twenty-third general convention here today with a declaration that John L. Lewis' plan for industrial unionism is nothing but "wild dreams."

Delegates noisily approved a resolutions committee report pledging the brotherhood to a policy of craft unions and condemning the industrial organization movement within the American Federation of Labor.

President William L. Hutcheson and Lewis have been at odds ever since the latter undertook to organize big industries into unions without regard for traditional craft lines.

The brotherhood also approved suggested changes in the ritual designed to emphasize the brotherhood's disapproval of communistic activities and theories.

Arguments of Wilson Are Recalled as Movement to Limit Tenure of President to One 6-Year Term Gains Headway.

By Franklyn Waltman

SENTIMENT again seems to be rolling up in favor of a constitutional amendment limiting Presidential tenure to one term of six years. Senator Edward R. Burke, Democrat, Montana, has announced he will propose such a step when Congress convenes. Advocacy of that proposal has also come from several other quarters, before and after the Burke announcement.

WALTMAN.

This movement appears to have been inspired, in part, by talk that President Roosevelt may smash the greatest of all American precedents by running for a third term. But it chiefly has been actuated by the belief that such a reform is desirable, that it can be achieved only during the second term of a President and that the present affords an opportunity which should not be lost.

There is nothing new about the idea. In the last ten years six constitutional amendments limiting the Presidential tenure to one term of six years have been introduced in Congress; three others definitely fixing the term were introduced in that period. In the lame duck Congress which preceded the first Wilson Administration the proposal made great headway until the new President determinedly opposed it.

* * *

Undoubtedly the present system is open to abuses. It is virtually a household saying—of truth—that a President spends most of his first term laying the ground for a re-election. Nevertheless, all the arguments are not on one side, as Woodrow Wilson ably demonstrated in a letter to the late Mitchell Palmer, which in February, 1913, was brought to Washington from the then Governor of New Jersey by his secretary, Joseph P. Tumulty.

If this matter is to be seriously considered by the next Congress, Wilson's views are entitled not only to careful consideration, but to substantial weight. When he wrote his letter he was the country's outstanding student of the American political system and was a practical politician as well.

Of course, he was thinking of a second term at that time, but he promised he would "most cheerfully abide by the judgment of my party and the public as to whether I shall be a candidate in 1916 and he pledged himself "absolutely to resort to nothing but public opinion to decide that question," adding that "the President ought to be absolutely deprived of every other means of deciding it."

And yet, if he is deprived of every other means of deciding the question, what becomes of the argument for a constitutional limitation to a single term?" he asked. "The argument is not that it is clearly known now just how long each President should remain in office. Four years is too long a term for a President who is not the true spokesman of the people, who is imposed upon and does not lead. It is too short a term for a President who is doing, or attempting, a great work of reform and who has not had time to finish it. To change the term to six years would be to increase the likelihood of its being too long, without any assurance that it would in happy cases be long enough. A fixed constitutional limitation to a single term of office is highly arbitrary and unsatisfactory from every point of view.

"The argument for it rests upon temporary conditions which can easily be removed by law. Presidents, it is said, are effective for one half of their term only, because they devote their attention during the last two years of the term to building up the influences, and above all the organization by which they hope and purpose to secure a second nomination and election.

"It is their illicit power, not their legitimate influence with the country, that the advocates of a constitutional change profess to be afraid of, and I heartily sympathize with them. It is intolerable that any President should be permitted to determine who should succeed him—himself or another—by patronage or coercion, or by any sort of control of the machinery by which delegates to the nominating conventions are chosen.

"There ought never to be another Presidential nominating convention; and there need never be another. Several of the States have successfully solved that difficulty with regard to the choice of their Governors, and Federal law can solve it in the same way with regard to the choice of Presidents. The nominations should be made directly by the people at the polls. Conventions should determine nothing but party platforms and should be made up of men who would be expected, if elected, to carry those platforms into effect. It is not necessary to attend the people's business by constitutional amendment if you will only actually put the business into the people's own hands."

Thus Woodrow Wilson summed up the case against imposing a single term on the President by constitutional amendment. Not content with assailing the proposal, Wilson went on to point out the advantages which the existing system possessed, but that will have to wait until tomorrow.

Railway Denied Stand, Inquiry Halted in Row

By the Associated Press.

A Senate railway investigation broke up in an angry flood of words yesterday when a Cleveland railroad attorney accused Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, of refusing to permit the Missouri Pacific Railroad to defend its accounting methods.

Wheeler, chairman of the investigating committee, was baout to recess the hearing until today when P. J. Mulligan, counsel for the road, leaped to his feet and demanded the road's witnesses be heard.

"I don't propose to let you tell me when witnesses should be called," Wheeler replied.

Wheeler had just said the testimony showed the railroad had "falsified" its accounting books and had filed "false" financial statements with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the investing public.

"Was in Financial Peril."

Earlier Joseph B. Eastman, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and former co-ordinator of transportation, said the Missouri Pacific had "presented a false record of its current assets, its liabilities and of its income accounts."

He added the road was "enabled to make this false showing to its advantage at a time when it was in great financial peril."

Missouri-Pacific was among the holdings of the late Van Sweringen brothers, of Cleveland.

Mulligan had been sitting almost unnoticed at one end of the long committee table. As Wheeler concluded his statement, he demanded to be heard:

"We had hoped for a chance to make an explanation of the Missouri Pacific's accounting methods," Mulligan shouted. "The inference has been made that either our books, or the books of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, (depositary for the road), were false.

"We have two witnesses who can testify to the correctness of these practices."

"Your witnesses will be called in due time," replied Wheeler. "I'm not going to get into an argument with you and I don't propose to let you tell me when witnesses should be called."

"You said you were interested in getting the facts," Mulligan responded.

"I don't care to hear you go on with any tirade," Wheeler shot back.

"It is unfortunate this word should be broadcast to the public without our having a chance to defend ourselves," Mulligan replied. "We are prepared to show our accounting practices are good."

"You can show them when the time comes," rejoined Wheeler. "You'll probably have a fuller opportunity than you want."

"It won't be fuller than we want," Mulligan retorted.

Earlier, Wheeler had accused the railroad of carrying on its books as a special deposite an item of $3,200,000 which he said in reality had been turned over to the Guaranty Trust Co. in payment of an obligation.

This debt, he said, was to Terminal Shares, Inc., a subsidiary of Alleghany Corporation, the No. 1 holding company of the Van Sweringen pyramid, and was part of the purchase price of terminal properties in St. Joseph and North Kansas City, Mo.

Officers Speed Murder Search In Montgomery

Solution of one and possibly two murders and a series of robberies last night awaited the capture of two men named as the slayers of Elwood Matthews, an elderly Montgomery County truck farmer, as State and county police swarmed over the nearby Maryland suburb of Kensington in search of one of them.

His mother told police she had heard a news broadcast by a Washington radio station saying her son and another man were sought for the Matthews murder. She awoke him, she said, and he quickly left the house with the explanation that he was going to the Kensington police station to inquire about it.

William B. Reed, 25, the second fugitive, apparently had left the county, but State police at Charleston, W. Va., whose capture of a third accomplice led to the solution of Matthews' brutal murder, were quoted by the Associated Press last night as saying arrest of the men would be "only a matter of time."

W. Joseph Kirby, of Scranton, Pa., captured by West Virginia authorities, has confessed the killing, naming Gingell and Reed as his accomplices, according to Montgomery County police.

Matthews was slain, Montgomery County police say, to avenge the conviction of Reed's brother, Edward, in a holdup two years ago. Edward Reed got ten years in the Maryland House of Correction and records of the trial show Matthews a witness against him.

Meanwhile West Virginia police charged against the three men the abduction and robbery of Foster Speicher, of Oakland, Md.; the robbery of Dennis Sarver, at Ronceverte, W. Va.; the burning of an automobile near Harrisonburg, Va., and a series of crimes committed in the vicinity of nearby Silver Spring, Md.

Police added to the list of crimes the slaying of W. Earl Dollman, of Charles Town. Dollman, 32, a salesman, was found beaten to death in his blazing automobile near Sutton, W. Va., early Thanksgiving morning.

"The three young men in question are by no means eliminated from the Dollman investigtaion," West Virginia authorities were quoted as saying.

Hearings Started On Claw Machines

The legal status of claw machines—whether they are games of chance or games of skill—was disputed in District Court yesterday when hearings on a permanent injunction to restrain police from seizing them was begun before Justice Jesse C. Adkins. Owners of the machines are operating now under a protective temporary injunction obtained several months ago.

In support of the Government's theory, John J. Wilson, assistant United States attorney, had detectives who had studied the contraptions, give their observations. One, Roy Blick, said he had seen one man play a game 200 times and win 11 clocks. There was also testimony that the "claws" did not always descend in the same place, even though the crane was not changed by the player.

Mother of Gingell Appeals to Boy To Give Self Up in Farmer's Slaying

Parent of 12 Shocked as Radio Told Her of Police Search.

Lawrence Gingell came home about 8 o'clock Monday night. He hadn't been home in two months, but he didn't tell his mother where he had been, what he had been doing.

His mother's home is in Kensington, Md. With her live 8 of her 12 children, the youngest 2 years old. The three oldest, Lawrence being the third born, have left the family home.

Lawrence, who is 20, didn't tell his mother he was wanted for the murder of Elwood Matthews, Silver Spring farmer. He didn't talk to his brothers and sisters, who welcomed him back. They studied their lessons, talked, but Lawrence morosely sat listening to the radio. Then he went up stairs to bed.

Last night Mrs. Gingell, through The Post, sent this message to Lawrence. She said:

"Lawrence, please give yourself up. Your mother has arranged for a lawyer to defend you. Don't stay away. Your mother."

Sits Up Waiting.

And last night and into the early hours to the morning she sat up alone, the rest of her flock safely tucked in, waiting for Lawrence.

"I expect any minute to find that something has happened to him."

Mrs. Gingell's husband, a carpenter, died two years ago. She has never had enough to keep things going, but she has. Her children are kept in school, they are neat, she has fought a good fight.

But she doesn't understand Lawrence. It was about 6 o'clock yesterday morning that she heard over the radio her son was wanted in connection with the brutal murder of Matthews.

"Mr. Matthews was a nice old man," she said. "I had often met him in the store."

Heard It Over Radio.

It was early morning, the radio was turned on. She heard police sought her son for the murder. It was a horrible shock.

Upstairs she ran. She shook Lawrence, awaking him, he said:

"Lawrence get up.

"Put on your best clothes and go to Bethesda and give yourself up to the police.

"I have just heard over the radio that you're in trouble—bad trouble. That's the only thing for you to do."

Lawrence answered, she said, "'Mom, I don't know what it's all about. It's a pack of lies.'"

"Lawrence never was a boy to talk," she said.

Cooked His Breakfast.

So Lawrence got up, put on his best suit and came downstairs. His mother got his breakfast. The first time she had cooked for him in two months. She questioned him. All he said was:

"It's a pack of lies."

And so Lawrence left the house, his mother thinking he was on his way to the police station. A few minutes later the police came for him. She told them he had just left to give himself up. But he didn't.

Mrs. Gingell said Lawrence is her only bad boy, the only one of her 12 children who went wrong.

When he was a youngster, he started caddying, Mrs. Gingell said.

"Caddying doesn't do a boy any good," she said. "They learn to gamble, smoke and drink."

Early this morning Mrs. Gingell sat up for news of her son, hoping nothing has happened to her bad boy.

She knows he only had 35 cents when he left, because while he was sleeping she went through his pockets looking for some clew as to where he had been, what he had been doing, during his two months away from home.

Widow Has Kept Family Going in the Face of Heavy Odds.

It was in October when Lawrence went away from home. It was the same time that William B. Read and W. Joseph Kirby were released from the Maryland House of Correction.

It was Kirby who confessed to police about the killing of Matthews, implicating Lawrence and Read.

"I was always trying to keep my son away from that Read boy," said Mrs. Gingell. But he wouldn't listen to me."

Thread Clew Leads To Arrest in Theft Of Guns at Armory

Sometime ago six guns were stolen from the armory at Fort Belvoir, Va. Later four of the guns were found in a canvas bag.

Department of Justice agents examined the bag under a microscope and found a clew which led to solution of the theft, they announced yesterday.

Threads in the bag, agents said, were traced to a sewing machine used by Private E. Emerson, an Army tailor at the post. Emerson was arrested yesterday. Confronted by the evidence of the threads, he confessed, it was announced. He was turned over to military authorities for punishment.

State Won't Return Ann Hewitt's Mother

San Francisco, Dec. 15 (AP).—District Attorney Matthew Brady said tonight he will not bring Mrs. Maryon Cooper Hewitt here from New Jersey to face trial for conspiracy to commit Mayhem because of the reluctance of her daughter to testify against her.

The attitude of the daughter, Ann Cooper Hewitt, was disclosed by her attorney, Russell P. Tyler. Miss Hewitt has a $500,000 damage suit pending against her mother as a result of a sterilization operation, the motive of which, she alleged, was to deprive possible children of a share in the Cooper Hewitt estate.

Science Lecturer Discusses Prayer

Mrs. Louise Knight, Christian Science lecturer, warned petitioners in prayer against prescribing the means by which they would be granted their requests in an address before an audience in Constitution Hall last night.

Many who pray include in their prayers "the definite way in which they would like to see their prayer answered," Mrs. Knight declared.

"In our natural eagerness to see it 'work out' we may have forgotten, just for the moment, that prayer which outlines its answer is not prayer at all, the lecturer said.

Girl Murderer Tells Remorse; Takes Own Life

Jealousy, Fear of Future Alone Caused Deed, Says Suicide Note.

By the Associated Press.

Lansing, Mich., Dec. 15.—Hope Morgan, who killed her best friend, hanged herself in the county jail today after a plea that "the world forgive me for what I did in a jealous mood."

Scrawled notes found on magazines in her cell told her remorse for shooting Elizabeth Giltner, the daughter of a Michigan State College dean, to death a week ago as the two addressed invitations to Miss Giltner's approaching wedding.

"I merely thought Bess was going to have something I never would have," the 25-year-old relief administration stenographer wrote, adding, in the margin of an advertisement picturing a happily married couple, "I couldn't stand the fact of being the only one left."

Friends said Miss Giltner's marriage would have left Hope the only unwed member of their social set. The girls were sorority sisters.

Tonight Dr. C. W. Bradford, one of the two psychiatrists named by Circut Judge Leland Carr as a sanity commission to examine Miss Morgan after she was charged with first-degree murder, said the young woman "suffered from an anxiety neurosis based principally on feelings of inferiority and insecurity."

Dr. Bradford said Hope visited Miss Giltner the afternoon of the killing plagued with terror of the social contacts awaiting her that evening when she was to have been a hostess at a bridal shower. As the two discussed Hope's fears of a nervous breakdown, he said, Miss Morgan decided she would shoot herself.

"Realizing that in an hour or two she would be dead," Dr. Bradford continued, "she watched Bess, who was in a very happy state of mind, and realized * * * that her closest friends was getting away from her.

"She felt numb with fright and because Bess looked at her and commented on her queer expression the only thought she had was to shoot."

A week before the shooting Miss Morgan had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets. Just yesterday Sheriff Allan A. MacDonald removed a sharp, 6-inch nail file from her jail cell, fearing she would try to harm herself.

In the early hours this morning Miss Morgan fashioned a silken noose out of her pajamas. Her body was found hanging from a shower-bath fixture. Nearby lay the magazines in which she had written her message of remorse with a pencil and with burnt match ends.

Man Teetering on Hotel Ledge Lured to Safety With Cigaret

Firemen, Police, Rabbis and a Priest Appeal in Vain for Two Hours As He Threatens 18-Story Leap—Finally Seized 'Getting Light.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 15.—For nearly two hours today, Maurice Nast teetered on the edge of the eighteenth story promenade roof of a midtown hotel, threatening to jump, while a great crowd below craned necks and every form of appeal to his gallantry and his religious feeling moved him not.

Finally, a proffered cigaret turned the trick. Off guard a moment as he lighted it, a grim fireman crept up and seized him.

He was holding to the ledge with one hand when Annie Huse, a stenographer, telephoned police. Police called firemen, radio cars, an ambulance and an emergency squad.

Appeals by a priest and two rabbis failed.

The firemen tried to rig a net, but the span was too great.

"Will you have a cigarette?" he asked casually. Nast accepted, and the fireman nabbed him. At a hospital Nast said he "guessed he had suffered a brain spell."

Pair Found Liable In Copyright Case

Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, authors of "More Merry Go Round," Liveright, Inc., publishers, and the Van Rees Press, Inc., yesterday were held liable for damages for infringement of a copyrighted story in a publication of the Washingtonian Publishing Co., Inc., in an opinion rendered by Justice F. Dickinson Letts in District Court.

In his ruling yesterday, he asserted the usual notice of "copyright" which appeared in the magazine constituted a valid copyright and that the failure of the publishing company to deposit copies of the magazine with the Library of Congress did not deprive it of the right to damages.

The infringement occurred when a chapter in "More Merry Go Round" appeared with material "practically identical" with that of a story in the issue of December 10, 1931, of Washingtonian.

Act to Halt Rustling.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Dec. 15 (AP).—Wyoming ranchers moved today to combat the growing menace of modern cattle rustlers whose fleet, high-powered trucks yearly spirit hundreds of head of valuable stock off the State's vast ranges. Leaders of the Wyoming Stock Growers' Association said they would demand the State Highway Patrol be doubled to cope with the motorized thieves.

Bribery Sentence Appealed by Nolan

Sentenced to prison for a term of four months to a year and a day, William J. Nolan, local automobile dealer, who last week was convicted of bribery in connection with two colored witnesses, who were to have appeared in a divorce suit brought by his wife, Mrs. Alice M. Nolan, yesterday appealed to the United States Court of Appeals to review the case and in the meantime permit him freedom on bond.

Justice James M. Proctor sentenced Nolan in the morning, and within a few hours his attorneys had filed their appeal and had sought to free him on bond. No action was taken by the appellate court.

Meantime, Francis M. Kearney, indicted with Nolan, and who pleaded "nolo contendre," remained at liberty while Justice Proctor pondered his case. Kearney was recommended for probatoin by the Government. He assisted in the prosecution of Nolan, for whom he at one time acted as sales manager of one of the Nolan branches.

Rogers Extortion Denied.

Los Angeles, Dec. 15 (AP).—James F. Hall, 20, seaman on the aircraft carrier Lexington, pleaded innocent today to charges of trying to extort $5,000 from Ginger Rogers, film actress.

Public Counsel Plan Defended In Bar Address

Better Protection Assured Prisoners, U. S. Official Tells Junior Unit.

Advantages in having a "public defender," an officer paid by the State to perform the functions of an assigned counsel, were pointed out yesterday by Justin Miller, special assistant to the Attorney General, in a speech at a luncheon meeting of the junior bar section of the District of Columbia Bar Association in the Hamilton Hotel.

A public defender would be available from the time a person is arrested, and would be an added protection to each person accused of a crime at a time when counsel is most needed, Miller said. "The chief importance of an officer of this kind is, in fact, that he has a part in the case from the very beginning and is an assurance to the individual that he will get proper representation."

Proof that such a position can be filled successfully has been borne out by the fact that a number of cities throughout the country already have public defenders who, are discharging their duties satisfactorily, he continued. "However, there are a few arguments that are still voiced against establishing an office of this type," he added.

In this connection he mentioned that some persons argued that it was illogical for the State to have an officer to frustrate the good work of police and prosecutors; that a public defender was not needed, since "it is the duty of the judge and prosecutor to see that the defendant gets a square deal"; that an office of this type presented new opportunities for graft and chances for collusion between the prosecuting officer and the public defender.

Meeting each of these arguments, Miller stressed the fact the right of the individual to get proper representation was as important as the negotiation of good work from police and prosecutor; that the value of public defenders in other communities had already been proved; that such an officer is extremely important in his function of taking care of the client before he ever comes into court, protecting him through the period of the third degree and making arrangements for necessary costs to be expended for investigation and for preparation for the defense, and that such a position was an aid to the good work of the police because in instances where no plausible defense was indicated the officer simply advised the accused person to plead guilty.

Edith Maxwell Case Is Slated For Jury Today

Testimony in Wise County 'Patricide' Concluded; Argument Timed.

dria, and the two other defense attorneys.

Attorney Smith, who was engaged by The Post to defend Edith, announced at the morning session that he would not put her on the stand. He announced at the same time that he would not put Mrs. Anne Maxwell on the stand.

Smith's contention was that the prosecution had not shown that Edith killed her father, and that it therefore was not necessary for her to testify.

At her first trial, Edith frankly admitted that she struck her father over the head with a slipper while he was beating her. He went to bed after that, she said, got up about 40 minutes later, walked out to the kitchen to get a glass of water or to spit. In the kitchen, Maxwell collapsed and died.

The prosecution will contend, or at least, suggest, that Edith hit her father with a flat iron and not a slipper. The defense will contend that the prosecution has not proved that Edith struck Trigg Maxwell the fatal blow.

Will Cite Doctor's Testimony.

It also will recall the testimony of four physicians that Maxwell, judging from the autopsy report, could not have died from a "lick" or a blow on the head.

But it also will contend that if Edith did land a fatal "lick" on her father's head, she did it without malice. The defense will call attention to the testimony of 12-year-old Mary Catherine, Edith's sister, who testified yesterday that Trigg was "a-cussing and a-quarreling" and threatening Edith with a butcher knife when she struck back at him.

Six lawyers will do the "speaking" tomorrow, but the two that the jury will follow closely will be Oscar M. Vicars and Charles Henry Smith.

Vicars is a picturesque character, 74 years of age, perhaps the best criminal lawyer in the Lonesome Pine country. Vicars is being hired in this case as a special prosecutor by Lee Skeen, who is trying to send Edith to the penitentiary. He is Edith's uncle by marriage.

Vicars is helping Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greear, the official prosecutor, a young fellow who gets $25 for every conviction he scores in a murder trial. Uncle Lee Skeen will pay the elderly Vicars much more than that.

Smith Chief Counsel.

The chief defense counsel is Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, an attorney in his early forties, who has participated in many notable trials in Virginia, including the famous Mary Baker case. He was counsel for Herbert Campbell, a real estate broker of Arlington County, Va., who was charged with the murder. Campbell was acquitted.

The prosecution today called witnesses to show that Edith struck her father, not with a flatiron, but with a slipper, and also to show that Trigg Maxwell was not drunk on the night he met his death.

Special Prosecutor Vicars took up the cross-examination of Mary Catherine, Edith's 12-year-old sister, when the trial was resumed this morning.

Mary Catherine again burst into tears, just as she did yesterday. She told Vicars, who can glare at witnesses over eyeglasses that droop on his long nose, that she was "scairt" of him.

Too "Scairt" to Remember.

In response to several questions, Mary Kathryn said she couldn't remember. "Why can't you remember?" he asked.

"I was so scairt I didn't pay any attention," she said.

"Why were you scared?"

"Pappy said he was going to kill Edith and run mommy off."

Mary Kathryn told how Chant Kelly, a neighbor, came to their door after the quarrel started and how Edith told him to go away—"there is no fire here."

"Why did she do that?" Vicars asked.

"We were scairt of Chant Kelly."

"Well, you say you were scared of your father, and now you say you were scared of Chant Kelly?"

"We weren't scared of him shooting, or anything like that. I can't tell you why we were scared."

"Now, why can't you?"

"Well, Edith just had on a princess slip. That's why we were scared."

Vicars asked her why she had changed her story in a minor detail.

"I didn't testify no lie," Mary Kathryn sobbed, "you had me so scared, Mr. Vicars, I didn't know."

"Nothing in these questions to scare you, is there?" Vicars asked.

"I'm scared when I look at you."

The spectators laughed uproariously, and the bailiff rapped for order.

"Were you scared of me at the last trial?" Vicars asked.

"I'm scared of you all the time," Mary Kathryn said, and the tears streamed from her eyes.

Vicars literally asked Mary Kathryn hundreds of questions, and pounced on the slightest discrepancy between her answers this time and the last.

Finally, Mary Kathryn cried out: "Mr. Vicars, I don't lie."

It was a few minutes before 11 a. m., when Mary Kathryn was dismissed from the stand.

Former Deputy Sheriff R. S. Hubbard, who investigated Maxwell's death, was the first rebuttal witness called by the prosecution.

"Were there any marks on Edith?" Greear asked him.

"No."

Mrs. Vie Horne, who saw Edith after the tragedy, said the same thing.

"Did you take off her clothes and examine her body?" Defense Counsel A. T. Dotson asked.

"No, I just said I didn't see any cuts or bruises."

Ruth Baker who was Edith's roommate at Normal College, was recalled. Earlier she had testified she heard Edith say several times that she would kill her father.

Denies Threat.

"Did you ever make the statement, now I am going to get even with Edith Maxwell?"

Ruth looked over to where Edith was sitting and denied vigorously that she ever said such a thing.

Commonwealth Attorney Greear then called several witnesses who saw Maxwell the evening of his death, and who swore that he was not drunk.

Defense Attorney Dotson asked Malcolm Adams, a rebuttal witness, if he had been in a Kentucky penitentiary recently.

"No."

"Were you confined in any penitntiary recently?"

"I was at Atlanta."

"What were you in the Atlanta penitentiary for?"

"Whiskey."

Defense Fund Grows.

Funds for the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund, being raised by The Washington Post, grew last night as three new contributors gave to the support of the defense of the "Lonesome Pine Girl."

"Were I in a position to do so," said one, "and were the courts of justice in our land conducted differently, I would enclose a check for at least $500 for the Edith Maxwell defense.

"The enclosed two cents is just exactly what her chances of being acquitted are worth."

Those who gave to the defense of the "Lonesome Pine Girl" included: H. A. T., $1.00.

Anonymous, $1.00.

A New Deal for Civil Service

Foreign Service Career System Offers Model For Future of Merit Promotion in U. S. Bureaus

This is the seventh article in a series by Robert C. Albright, of The Post's National News Staff, reciting the history of the merit system for the Federal civil service, what has been accomplished and what remains to be done in the way of legislation and administration to achieve the objective of a career service based on merit and not party spoils.

By Robert C. Albright.

Once derided as a haven for "cookie pushers," the United States foreign service today affords this Government's outstanding example of a smoothly functioning "career service," generously rewarding merit, relentlessly weeding out the unfit and sending the cream of the international diplomatic corps to the far flung posts of the earth.

These officers, who handle this country's political, commercial and social relations with every Nation in the world, are picked for the service by high caliber examination, probably more difficult than any other administered for special office.

The few survivors of these rigid tests become the counselors of embassies and legations, the diplomatic secretaries, the consuls general, consuls and vice-consuls at capitals of some 57 foreign countries, and in some 259 leading cities of the world. They may, and often do, become ministers and ambassadors.

Strictly limited to the State department foreign service, the system nevertheless offers a working model of what can be done if the "career" principle is more generally applied in civil service.

The foreign service is a "specialty" service, and so for the most part are other career systems now successfully functioning in the Public Health service, the Bureau of Standards, and the many Agriculture department scientific and technical bureaus. There is virtually no interchange of personnel between the foreign office and other Government classifications. The Government's next problem is to apply the career rule to less specialized functions of administration, with well defined steps for advancement and transfer.

Severe Examinations Eliminate Unfit.

Value of life careers in the State department's foreign service received first real recognition in the Rogers act of 1924, requiring candidates for the consular and diplomatic service to submit to a difficult and comprehensive examination in subjects deemed important by the State department board of foreign service examiners. A procession of legislation has steadily strengthened requirements.

Examinations, severe from the start, were radically stiffened about five years ago, following recommendations of outstanding authorities on testing technique. Prior to 1931, it had been possible for so-called "cram schools" to stuff applicants with the information necessary to pass them. The new methods are subtly devised to weed out the student who has been specially drilled for the test by "cram" methods, although concentrated courses of instruction still are successfully offered by some institutions.

Standards were so high in the last examination, that only 32 out of 727 applicants qualified.

Though the tests are administered by the Civil Service Commission, they are devised by the State Department's own board of examiners, comprising Assistant Secretaries Wilbur J. Carr, R. Walton Moore and Sumner Welles; and Thomas M. Wilson, chief of foreign service personnel. The chief Civil Service examiner sits in.

Three full days of written examinations comprise the first gauntlet to be run by the aspiring young diplomat. Only if he makes a grade of 70 or better, can he compete in a later oral examination administered by the board. And only those receiving combined ratings of 80 or more on the two examinations are certified for appointment to the service.

This written examination forms the main means of entrance to the service, but there are two lesser doors. One, providing for transfer from other branches of the Government, is now virtually closed. The third is open to clerks in consulates or embassies who have passed 35. These need not take the written examination, but still must jump the oral hurdle.

Probationer Trained in Service School.

Although college education is not required for entrance, State Department personnel officers say experience shows that the broader the education of an officer, the better his opportunity for success. About 75 per cent of the present foreign service staff are college graduates a little over 17 per cent attended college but did not graduate, and only about 8 per cent have had no college training.

A signal feature of the foreign-career service is the training afforded the probationer in the State Department's Foreign Service Officers' Training school. So successful have been the results, that "in service" training is now being recommended by students of government for general application throughout the Government, as one base on which any eminent career system must rest.

Immediately after appointment, the young foreign service officer is given a probationary assignment to the field for preliminary training under direction of experienced officers at an entrance salary of $2,500. Only after experience of this character is he assigned to the training school. Finally, after several months training, he emerges as a vice-consul, ready for active service.

Passage and certification do not assure an appointment, that being a matter dependent upon the number of eligibles and the vacancies occurring during the 2-year life of the eligible list.

Economics:

"Prepare an itinerary for a representative of a large manufacturer of typewriters traveling westward around the world from London, visiting all of the self-governing Dominions of the British empire? . . . . ."

History:

"Do you consider that the British parliamentary system of government, as it operates today, constitutes a better check upon possible excess of bureaucracy than does the American presidential system? Justify your conclusions."

International affairs:

"Write an essay on attempts to limit and reduce naval armament by international agreement since the World War."

Ability Determines Advancement.

Once appointed, a foreign service officer is expected to serve wherever he is needed, or wherever he is considered best qualified to serve, whether in a consular office, a diplomatic mission or in the State Department in Washington. About half of the heads of State Department units have been foreign service career men.

Advancement in the service is on the basis of ability and merit, so far as the State Department and other designated agencies are able to determine it. A young man may enter the foreign service and advance in time through the various service classes to the position of counselor of an embassy or consul general. Even after attaining this rank, opportunities are still open to men of outstanding ability and worth, although the career service proper does not extend beyond $9,000 to $10,000 jobs in so-called "class 1."

Under the law, the Secretary of State is required to recommend to the President those foreign service officers who have demonstrated special capacity, for promotion to the grade of minister.

Whether he makes his selections from this list, when ministerial vacancies occur, is discretionary with the President. President Roosevelt, and, in recent years, former President Coolidge, have given liberal recognition to the career service in appointing both ministers and ambassadors.

Many Have Won Important Posts.

One bar to preferment of this highest type has been lack of independent financial means by most members of the career group who otherwise might be selected. Independent resources particularly are necessary in such posts as London and Rome, where an ambassador's salary of $17,500 is insufficient to finance the large social and functional demands.

Nevertheless, graduates of the foreign career service now fill some of this country's most important diplomatic offices in other lands. Among these distinguished "career" men are Joseph C. Grew, ambassador to Japan; Nelson T. Johnson, ambassador to China; Norman Armour, minister to Canada; Jefferson Caffery, ambassador to Cuba; J. Butler Wright, minister to Czechoslovakia; John Van Antwerp MacMurray, minister to Estonia, Litvia and Lithuania; Fred Morris Dearing, ambassador to Peru; George S. Messersmith, minister to Austria; Fred A. Sterling, minister to Bulgaria; Hoffman Philip, ambassador to Chile; and George T. Summerlin, minister to Panama.

A clerkship in the diplomatic service requires no formal examination, although the State Department reserves the right to examine applicants in particulars it deems advisable. Entrance salary for clerkships abroad is $1,560 to $2,000. It is possible to, and many clerks do, rise to the foreign service officer group, but clerks are not part of the foreign career service.

When the need arises, a clerk may be commissioned as a non-career vice-consul. But commission as a non-career vice-consul carries no increase in compensation, nor are such officers eligible for promotion to the grade of foreign service officer without undergoing examinations.

Longshoremen Bar Strike Aid, Oust Bridges

Grady announced the tentative agreement involved coast shipowners on one hand and the sailors, marine firemen and cooks and stewards.

Observers believed, however, definite action for peace would await the outcome of Bridges' campaign in the East.

Meanwhile, strike movements spread in other branches of the Nation's commerce.

At Toledo, Ohio, Glen W. McCabe, president of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, announced cessation of work, effective at midnight, at Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. plants at Toledo, Shreveport, La., and Charleston, W. Va.

McCabe said the 4,300 workers in the laminated and plate-glass plants at Toledo would report on regular shifts and man the plants, but would not turn out any work.

The Ottawa, Ill., plant has been closed for two weeks in sympathy with an earlier strike involving five plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. Libby-Owens-Ford and Pittsburgh together produce 90 per cent o fthe Nation's plate glass, an important part in atomobile production.

Twenty-five hundred members of the United Hat and Millinery Workers' Union went on strike at the John B. Stetson Co. plant in Philadelphia.

Broker Brothers Jailed for Frauds

New York, Dec. 15 (AP).—Carlisle Rountree, and his brother, Louis Underwood Rountree, convicted last week of mail fraud in connection with their operation of cotton brokerage offices in New York and Texas, today were sentenced to prison terms.

Carlisle Rountree, described by the prosecution as "white collar public enemy No. 1" was sentenced to five years by Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell and his brother was sentenced to one year and one day and fined $1,000.

Foes of Hamilton Will Seek Delay

By the Associated Press.

Opponents of John Hamilton were playing for delay last night as the time for a showdown on his proffered resignation from the Republican national chairmanship approached.

With his departure for Chicago to meet with the national committee tomorrow, it became known that an attempt would be made to defer a decision on his resignation until January or later.

Hamilton has announced he would resign, but his statement implied he would remain as chairman if given a vote of confidence. His friends on the national committee are expected to seek an immediate vote approving his work.

Today Hamilton will preside at a meeting of the executive committee. Representative Fish (Republican), New York, who has been demanding Hamilton's scalp, headed for Chicago also. It was said here that he had one or more proxies from members of the national committee, and proposed to sit in the meeting.

Franklin Roosevelt, Jr., Is Reported Improved

Boston, Dec. 15 (AP).—Doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital reported today it might not be necessary to operate on Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.

They reported the President's son was "much improved." He has been in the hospital since the day before Thanksgiving suffering acute sinus infection. They declined to predict when he might be discharged.

Judges Quash Larceny Case Against Peter

Ruling Accords With Plea of Grand Jury Which Indicted Attorney.

An indictment charging Edward Peter, former counsel to the Montgomery County Commissioners, with false pretenses and larceny of public funds was quashed yesterday by the three judges of the Montgomery-Frederick County Circuit.

Following the judges' action State's Attorney James H. Pugh announced that he would nolle pross a second indictment charging Peter with embezzlement of county funds amounting to $15,402.05.

Chief Judge Hammond Urner who, with Associate Judges Arthur D. Willard and Charles W. Woodward heard arguments on the case, announced the court's decision. In this connection he said:

"This ruling not only represents our judgment upon the distinct question as to a misjoiner of counts in the indictment, but it also tends to gratify the expressed desire of all the members of the grand jury that the prosecution of the case be discontinued; a request which the State's attorney conscientiously felt he was not at liberty to fulfill by his own action in view of his official responsibility."

Arguments on the petition of Peter's attorneys to have the first indictment quashed were heard by the three judges Friday, but decision was withheld. The defense attorneys, led by Robert Peter and F. Bernard Welsh, contended that the indictment should be dismissed because of eight errors in its preparation and because they alleged it was drawn in such a confusing manner that the defendant could not definitely determine the specific nature of the charges.

Peter was dismissed from his post last March and subsequently was indicted by the grand jury. Members of the jury later signed a petition asking the indictments be dismissed saying they were not informed when the case was before them that it was customary for the commissioners' attorney to handle county funds.

The charges against Peter, who led the successful fusion campaign to wrest control of the county government from the local Democratic organization in 1934, grew out of proceedings to secure rights-of-way for the widening of Wisconsin avenue in Bethesda.

Camden Bartender Asks Imprisonment To Ease Conscience

Walking into police headquarters yesterday afternoon, a Camden (N. J.) bartender informed detectives he wanted to make a complaint against himself.

The desk clerk, Roy V. Wolfe, was loath to stop his work to listen, thinking himself the victim of a joke. The man was persistent.

He said his name is Daniel David Denney, 59, and that he had been intrusted with $300 in Camden and had lost the money in a dice game. Feeling guilty and fearing police, Denney said he left. But his conscience refused to let the matter drop, so he said.

Wolfe obliged the man and locked him up at the First Precinct Station and communicated with Camden authorities to check the story. No word had been received last night.

3 Hurt in Falls Here, One Gravely

Two workmen were injured Monday when they fell 30 feet from a scaffold at 1102 W street southeast, and a short time later the owner of the house on which they had been working was himself hurt severely in a fall.

In the first mishap, Leo Mathews, 19, of 825 Fifth street northwest, and William Ferry, 32, of Capitol Heights, Md., were hurled to the ground and taken to Casualty Hospital. Mathews suffered a broken wrist and severe cuts to his head and face, and Ferry was bruised and cut.

Less than an hour later, James I. Hicks, 52, a retired policeman, proprietor of the W street home, fell and struck his head on the sidewalk near his home. He was treated at Casualty Hospital for a fractured skull.

Physicians said neither of the workers was seriously injured, but that the condition of Hicks was critical.

Driver Fined $110.

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 15.—George W. Poling, Pennsylvania avenue, was fined $110 and costs in Justice of the Peace Court yesterday on charges of operating a motor car while intoxicated and of reckless driving. Patrolman Clarence C. Roby said Poling's car struck a messenger boy's bicycle, throwing the youth, James Smith, to the street. The boy was not injured. Poling's machine later crashed into the rear of a coal truck.

Crash 'Altered' Basic U. S. Law, Ayres Declares

Managed Economy Expected by People, He Says, But Predicts Boom.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cleveland, Dec. 15.—Although there has been no change in the written document, the Constitution has been "amended" during the depression, Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co. and noted economist, said in a speech today before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

"The new amendment charges the National Government with responsibility for the economic conditions under which our citizens live and work," he said. "During this depression we have abandoned our old principles which restrained the National Government from attempting to solve the economic problems of the people."

Recent legislation, Ayres said, seems to be designed to create ultimately a true managed economy. He described such a system as "one in which the Government controls the volume of output of the principal products, and the conditions and hours of wages of the workers."

"There can be little serious or helpful long-term forecasting under a system of managed economy," he said.

Nevertheless, Ayres concluded that general business will be better in 1937 than in 1936. He said it seems probable that the volume of new construction will increase, but he did not agree with those who predict a building boom. The volume of railroad freight traffic, he predicted, will increase and the automobile industry will continue to lead the way out of the depression.

"Wholesale and retail commodity prices and the cost of living will probably advance next year," Ayres said," but it does not seem likely that any price condition that could truly be termed inflation will develop in this country in 1937."

Ayres added that "interest rates may confidently be expected to remain low next year."

Concerning conditions under which business may expect to operate in the future, Ayres said that the people sincerely believe the Government has discovered a method for overcoming depressions and for creating prosperity.

"What this really means," he said, "is that by logic of events our National Government stands committed to maintain continuous prosperity."

G-Man 'Explains All' On Call for Police Aid

Indianapolis, Dec. 15 (AP).—A report last week that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, had sought police aid in a search for two typewriters stolen from the bureau's office here brought forth explanations today.

John A. Dowd, in charge of the office, said: "We can take it, but the story's all wrong. The typewriters were not ours. They were stolen from a freight shipment at Fort Wayne, Ind., and we asked police to check pawn shops in the hunt for them."

At police headquarters it was admitted the larceny report read as though the typewriters had been stolen from the G-Men's office.

Consumers Ask An Amendment On Social Laws

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 15.—The National Consumers League placed itself on record today in favor of a constitutional amendment "to permit without question effective federal and state labor and social legislation."

Acting upon the recommendation of its board of directors, the League proposed a two-fold course:

"1. To provide for inviting experts on constitutional law and bill-drafting to act as a committee, in co-operation if possible with other groups, to draft a proper amendment; and

"2. To authorize co-operation with other groups in working for such an amendment."

Former Governor John G. Winant, chairman of the Social Security Board, was re-elected president of the Consumers League. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Felix Frankfurter and Newton D. Baker are among its vice presidents. Dean Charles E. Clark, of the Yale University Law School, presented three suggestions relating to amendments.

Michigan Joins States Seeking Security Laws

Alabama Court Voids Taxes for Jobless Insurance As Unconstitutional.

By the Associated Press.

Unemployment insurance had its ups and downs yesterday.

Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald summoned the Michigan Legislature to special session next Monday, raising the prospect that at least 31 States will have joined the Federal program before the year ends.

In Alabama a State unemployment insurance law was held to violate both the Federal and State constitutions. A decision by a three-judge Federal court at Montgomery enjoined its enforcement. Although the Federal law had been challenged, the court did not pass on that question.

The first case to test the taxes under the Federal statute reached the United States Supreme Court yesterday on an appeal from the recent ruling in which Judge George C. Sweeney, of Massachusetts, upheld the law.

Twenty-two States have enacted unemployment insurance. North Carolina is expected to do so today. The Virginia and West Virginia legislatures are in session and sessions for the purpose begin today in Maine and Tennessee. Other States where sessions impend are Minnesota, New Jersey and Vermont.

Copies of the Alabama decision were eagerly awaited by legal counsel for the Security Board.

The Alabama court held that the State tax, levied on employers of eight or more persons, was arbitrary and violated the legal requirement of "due process."

Meeting Is Canceled.

Due to the Christmas holiday season, the December meeting of the Southwest Citizens Association, scheduled tonight, has been canceled, it was announced yesterday. Sessions will resume next month.

Extra Sum Sought For Fire Equipment

Fire Chief Charles E. Schrom has decided to seek an additional $12,000 appropriation for the purchase of nine pieces of fire-fighting equipment instead of revising specification as previously planned.

The current District act authorized the purchase of four hose wagons, two pumping engines, and three 100-foot ladder trucks but carried only $92,000. The lowest bid received by the District was $104,000.

Schrom pointed out that at present the department has ladders of only 85 feet whereas building regulations permit structures of 110 feet. The Commissioners will have to act upon his recommendation before an estimate is sent to the Budget Bureau.

Jews Beaten in Poland.

Warsaw, Dec. 15 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—A large number of Jews was beaten today during disorders at the town of Czyczew, in the Bialystok district, despite the presence of police reinforcements. Jews were forced to leave shops and many windows of Jews' houses were broken.

Blind Alley Is Closed, Land Given to G. W. U.

Closing a blind alley and dedication of the property to George Washington University was approved Monday by the District Commissioners upon recommendation of the Alley Dwelling Authority.

The alley runs east from Twenty-third street between G and H streets and is connected with the property, which the ADA agreed to sell the university several weeks ago.

Mrs. Graham, 84, Succumbs In Chevy Chase

Illinois Native Had Been Resident of District Since 1891.

Mrs. Lucy Brooks Graham, widow of Benjamin F. Graham, died yesterday at the home of her son, George V. Graham, 8 West Virginia street, Chevy Chase, Md., after a prolonged illness. She was 84.

Mrs. Graham was born in Cass County, Ill., in 1852. After her marriage she went to Grundy County, Iowa. In 1891 Mrs. Graham and her family moved to Washington, where she lived until her death.

When Mrs. Graham was younger she was active in the Woman's Relief Corps, Grand Army of the Republic, and was a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. Before she lost her sight she painted in oils, and her children have many of her paintings.

Survivors are her three sons, George V. and Edwin C. Graham, of this city, and Chester B. Graham, of Baltimore, and a daughter, Mrs. Van A. Potter, of Rockville Center, N. Y.

Funeral services will be tomorrow at 2 p. m. at the home of her son in Chevy Chase. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

End of Sneezing Her Christmas Present

Georges Bonnet Tentatively Accepts 'Good-Will Ambassadorship.'

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Paris, Dec. 16.—Georges Bonnet, veteran financier and statesman, 12 times a member of the cabinet, today unofficially accepted a commission from Premier Leon Blum to go to Washington as an "ambassador of good will" and attempt to settle the Franco-American war debt controversy.

Bonnet's acceptance will depend on whether he is convinced the French Parliament will ratify whatever settlement he makes. He expects to give an answer before the end of this year. The Chamber seems much more favorable than formerly.

The French proposal, it was understood, will be along the lines suggested to Ambassador William C. Bullitt by Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos on November 30. It would provide for 20 annual payments of $28,001,250, or a total of $560,000,000. The French war debt, as funded by the Mellon-Berenger agreement of 1926, established the principal at $4,025,000,000.

If Bonnet accepts, he probably will start for Washington early in January. At about the same time, the French hope to begin negotiations with Great Britain to refund their obligation to that country.

It was four years ago this week that an angry chamber of deputies overthrew former Premier Herriot because he insisted of France's paying the debt annuity.

The French foreign office appeared relieved today over the favorable official and press reaction in America to France's note announcing another default today.

Mrs. Ida Offutt, Here 45 Yrs., Dies

Mrs. Ida Lee Offutt, 62, died Monday after a long illness at her home, 1334 A street southeast. Mrs. Offutt, who was born at Falls Church, Va., had lived in the District for the last 45 years. She was the widow of Joseph W. Offutt.

A member of Esther Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, Mrs. Offutt is survived by a son, Clarence H. Offutt, and two daughters, Mrs. Mildred O. Warman and Mrs. Hilda O. Warner; four brothers, James, Edward, John and Frank Heath, and three sisters, Mrs. Bertha Reid, Mrs. Elsie Miskell and Mrs. Paul C. Norris.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. today at the residence. Burial will be at Rock Creek Cemetery.

Madrid Woman Envoy Charges News Distorted

Blasting those American news organs that confuse the issues underlying the Spanish struggle and labeling Spain "the Belgium of '36," Senora Isabel de Palencia, Madrid's envoy to Sweden, told a luncheon gathering at the University Women's Club yesterday the battered barricades of the loyalist forces are the bulwarks of democracy.

"To describe everything that is not Fascist as Communist seems to be not an uncommon practice in America," she declared, adding that since many notables, including President Roosevelt, have been branded as radicals she felt honored to be associated with such company.

Reviewing the events that led to the outbreak of the revolt, (Spain's woman diplomat charged that three discontinued factions engineered the attempted coup—the church, the grandees and the army leaders. All three had been divested of age-old privileges, she said, and, bolstered by Moors and mercenaries, decided to flout the sovereignty of the Spanish people.

Denies Religious War.

"This, nevertheless, is not a religious war; Spain is a Catholic nation; Catholics cannot be Fascists," she said. The only churches destroyed by loyalists were used as rebel barricades; the only priests executed carried rifles and wore the rebel uniform. Such priests violated the oath of their high office and arrayed themselves against the dictum of the Vatican."

Here Senora Palencia recalled the position taken by the Catholic pontiff in 1934 when he called upon all Spaniards to stand by their legitimate government. Spain at that time had a rightist regime in the saddle and a brief but bloody rebellion had flared up in the Asturias.

"Thus we find in Spain today a goodly number of priests loyal to their church and its principles," she said. "Many of these come from the country of the Basques and have wholeheartedly supported the Spanish government."

Assails Army, Grandees.

The grandees, the traditional oppressors of the peasants, and the army that boasted 18,000 officers and 820 generals, were the other classes most affected by Spain's social legislation, Senora Palencia declared. She stated the Spanish army never had a tradition and always assumed the right to meddle in the politics of the country.

"The army generals broke their oath to the republic," the diplomat charged. "They never have been, and are not now, Catholics."

Earlier, at a press conference, Senora Palencia expressed her conviction Madrid will be "the tomb of fascism." She praised the generous aid of the famed "International Brigade," but denied that foreign help alone turned back the rebel tide.

"Franco's mercenaries have been thundering at the capital's gates since November 5," she exulted, "and Madrillenos have given them democracy's answer. Today their back is broken. By spring the forces of reaction will be crushed."

Senora Palencia speaks under auspices of the North American Committee in Aid of Spanish Democracy. In her delegation were her daughter, Marissa, Marcelino Domingo, president of the Left Republican Party in Spain, and Father Luis Sarasola, Catholic historian and theologian. The latter has written one of the most authoritive books on St. Francis of Assisi and is a member of a minor Franciscan Order.

"Father Sarasola is a priest in good standing," the Senora said, "and as a good priest, he is aligned against fascism.

Reputed Kin of Ritchie Held on Check Charge

Walter Clinton Parker, 58, of 23 Sixth street northeast, who told police he was a relative of former Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland, was charged with obtaining money under false representation at police headquarters yesterday.

Parker was arrested by detectives at his home on a warrant sworn to by Samuel J. Venable, of 1309 H street northwest. The complainant said Parker allegedly gave him a worthless check for $29.50.

A Class Tax.

Preliminary figures released by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, relating to individual income tax returns for 1935, place the total number of returns at 4,473,000, of which only 2,068,000 were taxable.

The latter figure represents less than 2 per cent of the total population. Moreover 89 per cent of these returns comes from persons with net incomes of less than $5,000, whose tax liability amounted to less than 7 per cent of the total amount due.

Income taxes in the upper brackets have already checked savings and led to a flight of capital into tax-exempt securities. Little, if any, additional revenue can be obtained, therefore, by further increases in the surtax rates applicable to large incomes. Any substantial additions to revenue from this source, apart from the increases accruing through continued business improvement, must be obtained by a broadening of the income tax base to include a larger proportion of the population.

The indirect benefits of a democratization of the income tax, however, would be greater than the direct returns indicate, because an increase in the number of taxpaying voters would make the people of this country tax conscious. A premium is placed on reckless spending by levying income taxes chiefly upon individuals in the upper income classes while relying upon indirect taxation to reach the great body of national income. Whatever the form taken by taxes, the masses pay heavily in the long run. It is both practically and economically impossible to place disproportionate burdens upon a mere fraction of the population, however rich it may be.

So long as we leave the people in ignorance of the fact that in the last analysis they have to bear a large share of the cost of government, admonitions to economize are apt to fall on deaf ears. For that reason it would pay the Government to collect small sums from individuals of modest incomes even if the actual returns hardly covered costs of collection.

The Test Of Continuation.

In his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, now made public, Robert Fechner recommends that the Civilian Conservation Corps be made a permanent governmental organization. Far more than is the case with most of the emergency agencies, public opinion will respond favorably to the move to perpetuate that enterprise which Mr. Fechner has so ably directed.

Transfer of the CCC from an emergency to a permanent status would, as its director recognizes, entail important changes in policy. Of first importance would be a guarantee protecting the new agency from political influences. To that end, Mr. Fechner would place all positions under the classified civil service. This is, of course, an essential preliminary step.

Changes would also be necessary in the field of objectives. As a permanent feature of the national program, emphasis would shift from relief aspects to even greater concentration on the conservation of national resources. Mr. Fechner declares that since 1933 the CCC has advanced the Nation's conservation program by 20 years. Inspection of the statistics appended to his report, or, better still, of the actual projects undertaken by the corps, tend to confirm the statement. And, as the director continues, "to stop now would unquestionably throw out of gear the long-needed conservation movement."

It is to be remembered, of course, that a certain dislocation must result from discontinuing any emergency organization which has demonstrated even a minimum of constructive value. The test of continuation must be the capacity of the unit to provide social advantages otherwise unattainable, and not merely its ability to show some returns as an offset to continued deficit financing.

By this pragmatic test, the CCC stands high. There is real merit in its demonstrated capacity to convert unemployed youths into confident and competent citizens. In addition to general improvement in the health of enrollees, Mr. Fechner remarks on the 300 types of jobs they have undertaken, each of which provides a practical experience that should stand them in good stead in becoming self-supporting members of society.

Whether the CCC on a permanent basis would bring greater emphasis on this highly desirable aspect of vocational instruction is not considered in the report. But the director of the United States Employment Service is a member of Mr. Fechner's advisory council. And this suggests that the important training function, and its co-ordination with the public placement agencies, will not be forgotten in the full discussions which must precede action on Mr. Fechner's far-reaching recommendation.

China's Tragic Loss.

The brutal murder of Chiang Kai-shek at the hands of an irresponsible subordinate is a shocking event fraught with possibilities of evil for China, the Far East and the entire world.

Whatever his shortcomings, Chiang Kai-shek had rendered enormous service to his nation during the past decade. In very large measure the stability which China has begun to reveal and the strength it was displaying in its relations with Japan were attributable to him. Given another decade of power, Chiang might well have been able really to unite China. But as a consequence of his untimely death, all the progress which China recently made is threatened. Her enemies may proceed with their ambitious plans to dismember the unfortunate republic, with certain danger to the unstable structure of world peace.

As a military leader Chiang's capacities were notable. The great march of the Nationalists from Canton to the Yangtse was made under his leadership and he created, with the aid of foreign advisers, the finest army China has ever possessed. But his later campaigns against the Chinese Communists were no masterpieces of strategy.

In the end, though he forced the Reds out of South Central China, he was unable to prevent them from escaping to the northwest. It was this failure, in a sense, which cost the life of the Nationalist leader. For it was the infiltration of Communist ideas in the ranks of Chang Hsueh-liang's forces which was indirectly responsible for the kidnaping of Chiang and his subsequent murder.

It was as a political leader that Chiang made his greatest contribution to China. Indeed, many of his military victories, over recalcitrant war lords, were largely achieved through astute political methods. In this manner he managed bit by bit to extend Nanking's authority while giving an ever-increasing area a more efficient and honest administration than China had ever before possessed.

His opportunism, which enabled him to survive for so many years despite sharp opposition, was best seen in Chiang's policy toward Japan. Realizing that China stood to gain nothing and to lose everything by open hostilities with the island empire, he steadily pursued Fabian tactics. Though it left him open to the charge of pro-Japanism, though it enraged the more ardent of the Nationalists, it nevertheless saved China from being swallowed up. And by progressively increasing China's military power and political stability he was clearly reaching a position to resist Japan more firmly than had been possible in the past.

With his disappearance China confronts chaos. There are at least as many candidates for supreme power as there were for the mantle of Yuan Shi-kai. The latter's death was followed by a prolonged period of civil war which wasted the nation's substance. A similar situation is a real possibility now. Yet the sense of nationalism which China did not possess in 1916 it has begun to have in increasing measure in our day. Chiang's death may unite rather than divide the nation. All in this country will hope that such may prove to be the case.

Bi-Partisan Commissions.

In an address before the American Public Welfare Association, Commissioner White of the United States Civil Service Commission made some very trenchant remarks about the ineffectiveness of the bi-partisan commission as a device for protecting the merit system. Dr. White and his audience were chiefly concerned about the inadequacies of bi-partisan civil service commissions, but their criticisms apply with equal force to all types of bi-partisan administrative agencies.

Unless the chief executives of the Federal and State governments, supported by their legislatures, are really sincere in placing merit above political service, the so-called independent bi-partisan administrative agencies will always be vulnerable to the attacks of spoilsmen. It is easy to appoint to such bodies minority members who are ready to take orders from party leaders or at least offer no opposition to the dominant majority group. Moreover, even if the minority members of a commission are able and resolute, they may be quite helpless in the face of a hostile majority, as Dr. White noted in referring to his own experience as minority member of an Illinois commission. The independence of such bodies is strengthened where the major parties have equal representation, but that does not free them from outside influences.

Finally, acceptance of the bi-partisan principle of appointment may be positively inimical to the merit system since it sometimes prevents the selection of the individuals best qualified to discharge the duties of office. Until support for the merit system is greater than at present, bi-partisan commissions may offer some protection against the worst abuses of the spoils system, but the public should realize the feebleness of their efforts in this respect. Complete freedom from partisanship in the routine administration of government is the objective toward which any long-term program should be aimed.

Cuba's New Constitution.

The new constitution which the Cuban Senate has unanimously approved appears to be an extremely advanced document. Its appeal is obviously directed to disaffected labor and peasant elements in the island republic.

For some time labor groups in Cuba have had their activities steadily curtailed by the government in the name of public order. The new charter, however, proclaims the right to work as a fundamental principle, guarantees the right to strike and, in general, places the workers under protection of the government. In addition, it aims to establish the foundations of a far-reaching social security system. But even more extreme are the provisions regarding the land problem. In view of the fact that a considerable proportion of the acreage formerly devoted to sugar production is now unused, the draft constitution stipulates the right of the government to expropriate such land and divide it among the landless peasants.

There is no certainty, however, that this constitution, even if it is approved by the Constituent Assembly which is to meet next summer, will be carried out in all details. It is not uncommon in Latin American countries to find a wide gap between law and practice. Thus while every nation south of the Rio Grande guarantees freedom of speech, press and assemblage, in at least a dozen nations dictatorial regimes are in power, and they are anything but friendly to the exercise of civil liberties.

In Cuba itself passage of the new constitution through the Congress coincides with the development of a new state of tension between the civil and military authorities. This circumstance of itself casts considerable doubt on the future of the draft charter.

Since the inauguration of President Gomez, last summer, the civilian government has tried to assert its authority over that wielded, without constitutional sanction, by the army, the active head of which is Col. Fulgencio Batista. But it is by no means certain that final victory in this struggle will rest with the government. Indeed it is an ominous sign that when the Chamber of Deputies balked at passing the 9-cent sugar tax law, favored by the army, it was dissolved.

The tax law was designed to provide $2,000,000 ostensibly to finance a rural education program under the direction of the military. The government has fought this demand on the reasonable ground that all education should be a function of the civil regime.

Who will win out in this struggle is not clear. But it is an ominous circumstance that, following the action of the Chamber, Col. Batista summoned military district commanders and other high army officials to a conference. There is considerable danger that even before the new constitution is proclaimed it will have been made obsolete by a new military coup d'etat similar to the kind which has kept Cuba in turmoil for years.

Good Detective Work.

Care in saving a bullet picked from a wall after an attempted holdup early in the fall, plus deductive reasoning worthy of a fiction detective, have resulted in a confession within less than 48 hours after discovery of the Elwood Matthews murder at Silver Spring. To the sergeants and the State's attorney responsible go the thanks of the entire neighborhood. Police work of this sort will aid materially in discouraging crime in these parts.

Enthusiasm is dulled somewhat, however, by the latest news that the alleged murderer has slipped neatly through the fingers of the police. A radio broadcast warned him of the imminent arrival of an armed squad and he escaped. This was unfortunate. Had the detectives been able to work in silence, such an escape might have been prevented. Development of policies under which warnings of this sort can be restrained is one of the urgent problems of modern law enforcement that must sooner or later be squarely met.

In the end the escaped man will probably be captured and justice for a sickening murder will be served. In contrast, the death of Corinna Loring stands out as a painful example of ineffective law enforcement. Murders differ, of course, but if something of the competency displayed by the Montgomery County authorities in the Matthews case had been available in Prince Georges County, the slaying of Miss Loring would probably not today be as complete a mystery as it was when first discovered, nearly 14 months ago.

Three Years Of Repeal.

From the Springfield Union.

Three years of repeal were not expected to silence all the arguments on either side of the liquor question. The consensus is, however, that the country took the wiser course. Perhaps the strongest arguments for repeal is that we hear less nowadays about gangsters, racketeers, bootleggers, hijacking, murders, kidnapings and accompanying million-dollar rackets. Profits that went to the illicit trade are going into the Treasury in the form of taxes.

The liquor problem, with its accompanying evils, will be with us always. Repeal is no cure. There may always be differences of opinion as to the effects of repeal on drinking habits. Certainly it is in large part true that the reduction of liquor consumption prior to prohibition was due to public sentiment created by instruction in temperance.

Beethoven Concert.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In addition to the able criticism written by your music editor, Ray Brown, in reference to the Beethoven program by the National Symphony Orchestra, given at Constitutional Hall last Sunday afternoon, may I add a few words.

The concert was an epochal one, and an occasion long to be remembered by those privileged to listen. A cycle of compositions by one composer would suggest unity and strength. In this case, Beethoven, undisturbed in a program of varying moods, found expression through the media of a superbly equipped orchestra, piano and chorus. The inspirational basis of the concert was, of couse, Beethoven's music. Director, orchestra, pianist and chorus were deeply aroused and responded. On no occasion remembered, has Dr. Kindler shown greater heights of emotional expression and dynamical stress.

As to Harold Bauer, few artists of our time radiate to such a degree the real Beethoven profundity and the tenderness and reverence for the composer's exalted art. It is as if the very soul of Beethoven had come again to earth. Those who may believe in reincarnation will wonder, too, at the physical similarity of the two men: build, height, head, physiognomy.

Beethoven believed in the massed human voice as a climax element, exemplified in his Ninth Symphony and the finale of the Choral Fantasy given on Sunday afternoon. The combined glee clubs of the George Washington University, most efficiently trained by Dr. Robert H. Harmon, furnished this choral background. The members sang without score and gave a most satisfying rendition—attacks, quality, climaxes.

Acoustical conditions existed favorable to the corners of a full house, deadening echo, piano in front; orchestra consolidated, increasing precision; singers in the rear, again deadening reverbration and poetizing tone. O. T. S.

South Out of Saddle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When the Democratic Party gains ascendency in the Nation, the vested interests of the North become apprehensive for fear that burdensome taxation will be imposed which must be borne by the greater wealth and industries of the more prosperous States. At the same time the colored race becomes apprehensive lest its political and civil rights be unduly restricted. The Southern States have been in the habit of retaining their representatives in Congress for a longer term, thus giving them seniority by virtue of which they become the chairmen of the leading committees. By this means they are able to shape and control legislation.

But the election of President Roosevelt in 1932 wiped out this local advantage. The national rather than the local character of the Democratic Party was still more strongly emphasized by the by-elections of 1934 and the unprecedented victory of 1936 contributed by all sections of the country alike. For the first time since 1860, Southern vote no longer constitutes a local menace in the Federal Government.

The Negro need entertain less dread of the nationalization of the provincial policy of the South respecting citizenship rights. The South is no longer in the saddle; but North, South, East and West are pulling together as one team, with the New Deal in the saddle.

Spoils System Campaign.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to congratulate The Post on the campaign it has undertaken to end the spoils system in government. I wish you every success, but I am somewhat skeptical that any effort along this line will be sufficient to penetrate the thick hide of this Administration.

Paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless true that the so-called reformer is usually a hardened spoilsman. Witness the recent appointment by one of the reformers of the Senate of his son as counsel for a committee of which the Senator is chairman.

One of the things this country needs most is an example of rugged honesty in government—a President who would put principle before party, who would refuse to bribe the farmers, the silverites and the labor unions, and would refuse to be intimidated by the veterans.

Your campaign is especially timely because under the present Administration the spoils system has hit a new peak and political morality has reached a new low.

Anti-Semitism and Peace.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since the Jew has been the perennial stranger in the midst of all peoples of the earth, he has become a convenient repository for their primitive hate impulse. The peoples of the earth will only then cease to hate the Jew when the Jew ceases to be a stranger in their midst. This he can achieve in only two ways, by mass or race suicide or by acquiring a homeland of his own.

The latter alternative, however, seems at present as impossible of realization as the former is inadvisable—inadvisable not only for his own sake but for the sake of humanity. For, if the peoples of the earth were denied a convenient outlet for their inborn animosity, their stranger-hating proclivities would soon flare up into civil and national strife that would soon destroy every vestige of civilization the Jew did so much to help create.

Anti-Semitism thus tends to promote peace on earth and good will toward all but Jewish men. So, let man hate on! The Jew can take it. ELI APPELBAUM.

The Case Of "Scholastic."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The refusal of the Board of Education to accept the recommendation of the subcommittee on Scholastic, that this journal be continued on the reading lists of the high schools, has aroused in many people a resentment of the board's action, and a desire to see this excellent magazine available to students as in the past 10 years.

The original charge made by some of the citizens' associations that the magazine was communist has been dismissed by the subcommittee as unfounded. The present dissatisfaction of the board hinges on the anti-war policy of Scholastic. The board must be reminded that there are few parents of high school children who would not openly support the stand of this journal on war—"War, as a means of settling international disputes, is a complete and absolute failure. . . . We shall fight war, and war-mindedness, and conditions which make for war, wherever we find them."

This, however, is only one aspect of a broader educational attitude of Scholastic. In an exposition of the editorial policy of this journal there is quoted from James Truslow Adams that America's outstanding contribution to the world has been "the vision of a society in which the lot of the common man will be made easier and his life enriched and enobled." Is this not strongly reminiscent of President Roosevelt's frequent references to the "more abundant life" and, as such, the expression of a true ideal for our children?

L. G. WILLIAMS,
Secretary, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.
Washington, Dec. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention has been called to a letter in your issue of December 8 by Miss Emma C. Miller, a public school teacher, and another in your issue of December 12 by Roy Gibson, both suggesting that the so-called "red rider" law here prevents public school teachers from preparing their pupils to resist and combat communism, by informing them as to, and condemning, the evil, atrocious and insidious designs of communism.

I fear that this lady and gentleman have been misled by unfortunately inaccurat statements frequently appearing in the public press, to the effect that the so-called "red rider" prohibits discussion, or mention even, of Russia or communism. As a matter of fact, this law has never been held to prevent either mention or discussion of Russia and communism in classrooms of our public schools. On the contrary, the corporation counsel expressly ruled in an opinion of September 5, 1935, that the law has a sound American purpose, namely —"to protect the American system of government from an insidious internal attack through the Government-supported-public-school system," and that teaching about and against communism is not only not prohibited, but contemplated and expected, in order to prepare pupils to resist and combat communism. The law merely bans the teaching or advocating of communism which would constitute the teaching or advocating of a criminal and subversive conspiracy. No informed loyal American citizen can want such ban removed. Even Superintendent Ballou admitted, in February last, the insidious and dangerous character of communism: "I have admitted, and I think, today, the most insidious and the most dangerous propaganda to combat in the United States has to do with communism."

Another misapprehension should be removed. The law requires no affidavits. Such requirement was merely an administrative one by the Comptroller-General in November, 1935, which in no manner controverted the corporation counsel's interpretation of the law. Such administrative requirement was clearly understood to be temporary merely, until the remedying of plain and undeniable conditions in the public schools here tending to cultivate in pupils a receptive and friendly attitude toward bolshevism. It is the ardent hope of all right-thinking citizens that these conditions may be entirely removed before long, so as to justify the withdrawal of such requirement.

We are now encouraged by the fact that, on December 2, 1936, the Board of Education took an important step looking to such removal, in part at least, by banning a certain study magazine which had helped to produce such conditions for quite a number of years, and which had been protested by the Federation of Citizens' Associations nearly a year ago, on December 14, 1935. In banning such a study magazine, said board was compelled to overrule contrary written recommendation of November 18, 1936, by its superintendent of schools.

GEORGE E. SULLIVAN.
Washington, Dec. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having read the offending messages in Scholastic, I am at a loss to understand the reason for the decision of the Board of Education in voting to discontinue circulation of this magazine in the District schools.

An editorial devoted to a constructive peace policy seems to be the only reason for this infringement upon our modern educational ideals. The charges of communism could be substantiated by no one. Past evidence has shown that communism follows as a result of the demoralizing effects of war, and those who condemn peace education are doing their best to plunge us into another war with its risk of revolution.

The question of war is a very important one to future participants and victims, and this action challenges the right of our children to independent thought and judgment. It should have the strong disapproval of all parents who would see their children develop into responsible citizens. PARENT.

Fair Enough

Duty Of Scions.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury spoke in riddles when he said that Edward VIII sought happiness within a social circle whose standards and ways of life are alien, but it would be my guess that he meant the rich and swift Americans for whom the King showed a preference.

However, the night club society of London is not much different from that of New York, and neither set has much to learn from the other about sin, idleness or all-around uselessness, and they are interchangeable. The American scions and scionesses who infest the night clubs of New York and Florida are at home in London and Paris, and the dashing young drunkards of both sexes who come here from London easily learn their way around our pubs and encounter old friends in them.

I was about to say that the present crop of rich and profligate wife traders and chasers are something new in the world, but there were plenty just like them in the '20's and at other times, all the way back. My reading tells me of spectacular goingson at Newport 40 years ago, and they allege that Edward's grandfather showed high speed around London and Paris in his time.

There was this difference, though—in those days the rich liked to hide from the public, whereas nowadays they frequent the most prominent saloons and court publicity with pictures. Old Edward, like the young one, ran a high score 'mid the pleasures and palaces of England and the continent, but though everybody knew he was lallygagging, they always barred the doors and kept the peasants out.

Still it does seem that the late King and the scions and scionesses of the American royalty have a solemn public duty to hold themselves slightly aloof, perhaps even at the cost of creating their own night clubs and promoting their own prize fights apart from the common herd. They set a bad public example and make things difficult for young men of the lower classes who have only a few dollars to spend of an evening and discover all the ringside tables engaged by scions who then try to dazzle their girls and buy their innocence with talks of yachts and shooting lodges away from it all.

• • • •

With great reluctance I have to admit that in the crazy countries—to wit, Italy and Germany—autocratic control does better in this matter. The dictators makes a cult of muscle, early rising, deep breathing and restraint in matters of alcohol and girls.

Romance is for breeding only, though here again, as in the case of the promiscuous scions and scionesses, we detect the barnyard standard of morality, the result is less uplifting.

The Archbishop of Canterbury needn't look at us in that accusing way. The late King was a headache, to be sure, and his American playmates of both sexes, but especially of the other, have been no testimonial to the power of religious training.

But Americans feel about the same as he does since it became impossible to drop in for the fights or a pitcher of beer at night without wading through the scions and scionesses neck deep.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

The Share the Divots Movement.

Uncle Sam plans to build 600 golf courses during the next few years, with the Professional Golfers Association acting in an advisory capacity. The Government is now out to do something to correct the forgotten stroke.

• • • •

Federal funds will pay most of the bill, but communities getting the new golf links will contribute a proportion of the funds needed.

• • • •

The idea is to make unrest permanent. No people can possibly be truly happy once they have taken up golf in a big way.

• • • •

The Government plans to bring golf within the reach of all.

• • • •

There may soon be a director of golfing at Washington. It is possible that you will write your Congressman for golf balls instead of pumpkin seeds. There may even be a demand for putt insurance.

• • • •

When a government starts monkeying with golf there is no telling where the experiment will end. As soon as the great mass of voters begin fooling with niblicks, there is bound to be a demand for legislation requiring that only the rich be made to drive over the water hazards.

• • • •

One of the first results will be a demand for a ruling on whether those boys who spend all their lives over a 2-foot putt become eligible for old-age pensions.

• • • •

In 1940 golf may play a big part in the campaign speeches. It will go bad with any administration that has made a promise to correct a bad slice and failed to make good.

• • • •

"I charge the Administration with breaking its platform plank to enlarge the cups on putting greens," the politicians may bellow, "and ruthlessly ignoring its promise to eliminate sandtraps."

• • • •

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

Powys: Poet, Mystic

By Irene Holt

IN "MAIDEN CASTLE," his latest novel Mr. Powys produced a book almost impossible to review with any degree of justice. Not because there is so little to say about it, but because there is so much, and in no amount of saying can one hope to convey the complete integrity of the writer and the terrible wisdom of the philosopher.

It is not a thing that one merely likes or dislikes any more than one likes or dislikes creation or religion. Mr. Powys is a novelist; he is also a poet and a mystic and as such the workings of his mind are peculiarly interesting and occasionally astounding. At times the lucidity of his style is stirred and troubled by the savage perversity of a morbid imagination, a cerebral lust that shatters his otherwise meticulous clarity. One is taken mentally flying down one open vista after another; impression upon impression is created and destroyed with a sort of savage impotence, finally becoming lost in a wilderness of infinite perspectives, most of them unpleasant.

Possessing something akin to the dark prose genius of Poe, Mr. Powys has the peculiar capacity of making his reader sense and even credit that obscure link with a still more obscure past that is so much more mystical, so much more magic than any possible present. Perhaps it is merely the old magic of the mind wherein the writer excels and when the mad Welshman in the story cries out: ". . . what those fools can't see, what my son won't see, is that power . . . of the Golden Age . . . they twisted it all round later, the sly children of gold and burning, turning the dew of darkness into evil, and Bran the Blessed into a demon . . . one remembers that before light there was darkness and in the beginning of things were spoken the four words "Let there be light."

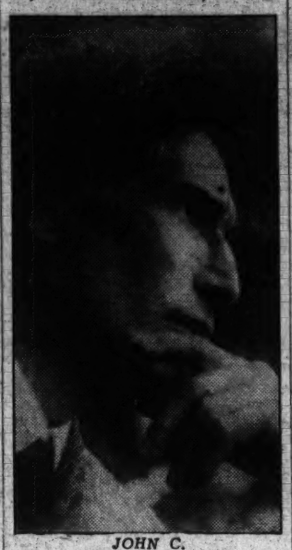
AS with Wolf of Wolf Solent and Magnus Muir, in Weymouth Sands; Dud No-man, of "Maiden Castle," possesses physical attributes and mental characteristics of his Creator—the bony face and sculptured sockets, the cerebral enjoyment of purely physical sensations and the "life illusion" with which Powys readers are already familiar. That is not to say that the novel is autobiographical any more than any novel is autobiography when its author sees and perceives with the eyes and mind of his principal character. Perhaps great writers, like great artists, are prone, consciously or unconsciously, to delineate their own type. Even as Raphael's madonnas and Botticelli's virgins regard one with the more or less modified lineaments of their creators, so do Powys' heroes obviously possess many of his own traits and idiosyncrasies.

For his men the writer has a deep-toned sympathy and understanding; for the women, more simply a flexible play upon externals. Not even with Wizzie Ravelston, one of the two most important women in the book, does one feel oneself, so to speak, projected into her skull and beneath her skin; to see as she sees, think as she thinks, act as she acts and observe as she does the immutable constancy of cause and effect. There is no lack of logic or emotion motivating the women, but neither is there the same completeness that rounds out the natures of Dud and his father, nor even the less significant character of old Prof. Wye, who subsists on no less substantial mental nutriment than the dialogues of Plato. Perhaps this is because Mr. Powys' men are more profound than his women. Certain it is that they are wrapped in a more protective cocoon of idealism and in closer touch with the dark nature of man in his sublime and even ridiculous moments, so that a certain magnificence of concept pervades the book from beginning to end.

Starting with Dud No-Man, who originally possessed neither Christian name nor surname and gave himself the startling nomenclature of D. No-man in a spirit of pure misanthropy, the chronicle continues with the lives of six or eight more or less eccentric persons thrown in contact with each other for a year. There are half a dozen plots and counterplots, all of them dominated by the brooding influence of Mai-dun Castle, an ancient ruin of the vanished civilization that built Stonehenge and Avebury.



JOHN C. POWYS.

NO-MAN himself is a middle-aged historical novelist arrived in Dorchester to write the story of Mary Channing, who was burned at stake in th egreat amphitheatre there 200 years before. For £18 he bought Wizzie Ravelston, bareback rider with a traveling circus, to be his companion. That Wizzie was the offspring of a mesalliance between gentility and mediocrity; that at 17 she had been seduced by the ringmaster of the circus; that she had a child, an unarresting face and a magnificent body, are all of thme incidentals, as was the fact of his rescuing her from an intolerable situation with the circus. There seems to be some want of natural instinct that leads him from one spiritual cul-de-sac to another so that while he is in some ways as egotistical as a baby yet he is "unable to fly into a normal, masculine rage"—a state of affairs peculiarly unsatisfying to Wizzie who has learned to expect from men all things save tenderness and restraint.

The climax of the story comes with No-man's discovery of his hitherto unknown father, the mad Welshman who believes himself the reincarnation of an ancien' god Uryen, by which name he insists on being known.

• • • •

THE violent spiritual relationship and struggle between father and son is the most moving theme in the book, involving as it does some 2,000 years of hereditary influence and cross currents of superstition that flourished in the days of Malory's "Questing Beast." In the minds of both men are abysses of dark notions upon which the author plays with an almost mystical supersense. He is a past-master at bridging the gap between the tedious illusions and prismatic enchantments of reality so that whatever the book may not be in the way of casual reading (and casual reading it is not) it has that quality and depth, that fine mesh of thought which is the hall-mark of great writing.

Lord Howard's Program Notes

By Denys H. H. Smith.

Had the joys of Paris night life not proved irresistible to a certain Spanish diplomat, Sir Esme Howard might never have been Ambassador in Washington and some of the most entertaining pages of the second volume of "Theater of Life" might never have been written. A letter of refusal from Sir Esme, entrusted for additional safety to his Spanish friend, did not reach the foreign office in time to prevent his name being sent to the King. Thus small events shape men's lives. If any other excuse is needed than that of diversion for such delightful books of reminiscences as Lord Howard's (to use the present, though less familiar, title), this is it.

Lord Howard's six-year Ambassadorship in Washington was the culmination of an extremely varied career. From his "seat in the stalls" he watched events in Crete during the insurrection and reconstruction period, in Switzerland before the war, and in Sweden during the war. He served in Paris as a member of the peace delegation and visited Poland as British commissioner in 1919. He was in Spain to watch the collapse of constitutional government and the rise of Primo de Rivera, and then came to Washington for the second time (he had served as councilor of embassy in 1907-09), to see America under prosperity and prohibition and note the beginnings of the decline of both.

As he watched the world's pageant pass, Lord Howard was not only conscious of the sweep and majesty of its movement. He had a keen eye for the clowning. Yet he could look at the frailties and foibles of men without looking down on them—a portly Cretan councilor fleeing before insurgent peasants stuck fast in the window frame and being belabored vigorously from the rear. Lord Howard himself arguing with a Hungarian registrar for births, who insisted that since there was no Hungarian equivalent for Esme and since the law required the name of the father in Hungarian, therefore the only course open was to omit the name of the father and list his son as illegitimate. The Prseident of Switzerland walking to his cabinet meeting with an untidy brown parcel under his arm containing early turnips from his garden for distribution to members of his council. A group of diplomats and prominent citizens taking turns peeping through the keyhole at a ceremony at the Spanish court. The full meeting of the Washington diplomatic corps to decide in solemn conclave a question which had stumped the resources of officialdom, namely where an American lady should sit at meals. (Even in a completely democratic country no more than one full-sized adult can pass through the doorway at a time, observes the author, defending distinctions of protocol.) All this and much more is noted with a kindly touch.

Lord Howard was close enough to events to throw new light upon them as well as garnish them from his memory's treasure store. The chapter dealing with the peace conference, with which Lord Howard incorporates a great deal of matter from his diary, is a historical document of importance. He is never so happy as when undermining some facile cliche, or exposing the spurious lucidity of an accepted version of events. Was, for example, Britain's failure to declare her readiness to fight largely responsible for the war? Not at all, says Lord Howard, who was in Stockholm at the time, and read the Swedish and German press and absorbed the German atmosphere.

Lord Howard's appreciation of men is as original as his judgment of events. He had a great admiration for President Coolidge. At first he found it a little disconcerting, when introducing so distinguished a visitor as Lord Cecil, to be met with a long and painful silence broken at length by a drawling, "When folks come to see me I expect them to do the talking." But in time he conceived a genuine affection for the President, not only because he admired his wry sense of humor, but because of the absolute confidence he had in his word. He was one of those rare and welcome individuals who invariably promised less than they performed.

He also admired Mussolini, though in a different sense. Whatever else might be said of him he was at least a "master of men." The two greatest men he was privileged to know, great not in the sense that Mussolini or Bismarck were great as "masters of men," but as servants of men, were, Lord Howard believes, Pius X and George V. "I believe that neither of them in their actions ever thought for a moment of themselves."

There are two recorded occasions on which Lord Howard forgot his customary diplomatic suavity. One was in Washington during the prohibition conflict, and ipso facto of a serio-comic nature. Drys (through moral indignation) and wets (through envy) were, it may be remembered, constant critics of diplomatic immunity. References to bootlegations and rumbassy row were two a penny. Congressmen indulged in the game of diplomatic baiting with vigor and pictured the wily foreigner debauching American womanhood through the unfair advantage he enjoyed. Diplomats learned that inflated values were not only to be found on the stock exchange. When a diplomat took a drink, that was news. When a British diplomat took a drink it was front-page news.

It was especially galling for the British Embassy to be singled out from the rest, for no other diplomatic oasis made such efforts to maintain itself as a watertight compartment (if such a phrase can be used in such a context). The British Ambassador was dismayed when he found about 30 pressmen and photographers watching a truck of wines being unloaded. He was more than dismayed when the clippings came in, "Booze for the British," etc. He was irritated beyond endurance when letters began to arrive taxing him with publicly flaunting the law of the land. One irate correspondent was answered to the effect that if the United States authorities wished to withdraw the privilege, the British Ambassador would accept the decision without demur. The recipient made the letter public and whatever else may be said of the controversy which followed, the legal privileges of the diplomatic corps were finally made clear.

The other occasion was during the war when Lord Howard was constantly badgered by the Swedish Prime Minister over violations of neutral "rights." Deserting his script, the Ambassador asked if the violation of Belgian neutrality had roused protest. When he was told that Sweden, not being directly concerned, had made no protest, Lord Howard turned loose his pent-up vehemence. "Germany took off her gloves from the beginning and you expect us to keep ours on . . . Great Britain will not, like her antagonist, torpedo unarmed merchant vessels and cause the deaths of those on board, but the Swedish government must be prepared to see everything possible done short of this murder to prevent goods reaching Germany and her allies through neutral countries. The old rules of maritime warfare no longer maintain."

The Swedish prime minister's protests ceased, but his experience in Sweden turned Lord Howard to a careful study of the whole theory of neutrality. He came to the conclusion that neutrals, tertii gaudentes (rejoicing third parties) as he called them, by insisting on their trading "rights" and enriching themselves by prolonging war were playing an unsavory role. "I rather prefer the so-called imperialist statesman who believes he is working for the greatness of his country . . . to those statesmen who grow righteously indignant over any interference with their liberty of making money out of trade with both belligerents, and so helping those to go on killing each other . . . it is indeed difficult not to feel anything but contempt for that kind of neutral."

But Lord Howard does more than deplore and view with alarm. He has two constructive proposals to make. His first is that the whole conception of "aggressor" and of sanctions against the aggressor should be abandoned. The League was formed to prevent war, not to sit in moral judgment on nations. Political prejudices and momentary passions make an unprejudiced verdict almost impossible. Lord Howard cites two instances in his own lifetime on which contemporary judgment erred. The falsification of the Ems dispatch by Prince Bismarck in 1870 inflamed French opinion and led to a declaration of war by France, who thus became the aggressor in the eyes of the world. The other case was the sinking of the Maine in 1898 which all thought at the time to be due to a Spanish torpedo.

But war itself is as near to being an unquestionable fact, independent of inference, as anything can be. So Lord Howard makes his second suggestion that the league should notify belligerents that unless they declare an armistice and prepare to arbitrate trade with them will cease. For "aggressor" Lord Howard would substitute "persistent and intractible belligerent." Another advantage of such a plan would be that action could be taken speedily while an attempt to reach a moral judgment must of necessity consume weeks or months during which the war still continues. If both of all belligerents prove intractable then all must be economically isolated.

To return for a moment to the incident recounted in the opening paragraph. Why should Sir Esme Howard have wished to decline the ambassadorship to Washington. The reason is characteristic. It was because he felt that some one more famous should be chosen for so distinguished a post. "I asked myself frankly, are you the man for a job like that? And I came to the conclusion that I was not."

However great their admiration for the former British Ambassador, many hundreds of his friends in Washington will be forced to admit that there was one occasion at least on which his judgment definitely erred.

Papa Dionne has been called the "forgotten man" so obscured is he by his daughter's fame . . . But Odell Shepard, Goodwin professor of English at Trinity College, had a different idea . . . He contended that the real "forgotten man" was Bronson Alcott, who shone only as the father of the young lady who wrote "Little Women" . . . Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy may not have been Marie, Yvonne, Emilie, Cecile and Annette, but they were sufficient to overshadow a man whom Emerson called "the greatest genius of his time" . . . So Prof. Shepard submitted a manuscript on Alcott to Little, Brown and won the $5,000 Centenary Prize . . . The book will be out next spring . . .

Lippincott announces spring publication of an intimate biography of "King Edward VIII," by Hector Bolitho . . . The release carrying this news is dated December 11 . . . This was the very same day on which King Edward VIII became David Edward Windsor . . . In this day and age, when history is being made and unmade quicker than a publisher's release can get through the mail to a book editor, then book publishing takes on the aspects of newspaper publishing . . . In New York recently I had lunch with Florence Bowers, Dutton's ace publicity woman . . . She was still out of breath from the excitement of getting out "Her Name Was Wallis Warfield" . . . It was scheduled for release December 7 . . . But when everything pointed to the King's abdication, the whole Dutton outfit worked overtime and got it out on December 4 . . .

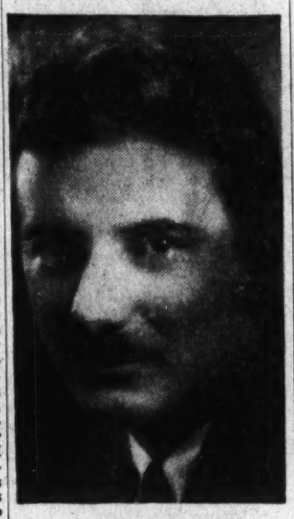
With No Oasis

By Theodore Hall

READERS of "The New Caravan" will find before them a handsomely made volume holding 653 pages of the kind of American stories, essays, plays and poems which no one else will buy. Ever since 1927, when Alfred Kreymborg, Lewis Mumford and Paul Rosenfeld edited the first of the "American Caravans"—this is the fifth—the placard has gone up large over these camel-trains to congratulate the reader upon his sharing the discovery of unpublished material. Though no mention is made of previous attempts to publish, there is still something excessively proud in that profession of virginity.

Here, and I quote from the present preface, we are to find work made "free of the arbitrary and irritaitng requirements of the specialized magazine or the commercial market." But of coin of the realm, all that these pages will apparently bring the authors is a royalty on "The New Caravan" split 44 ways among the contributors and, I presume, with three more parts to the editors. And it is rather sad.

For of writing as writing, there is here exhibited some extraordinary merit. I find not hard to imagine a bloated, money-proud writer for the Saturday Evening Post biting his nails in sheer envy over the skill with words of Paul



ALFRED. KREYMBORG.

Horgan, Aline Bernstein, Margery Latimer and Paul Corey. Their pages, and those of a few others, are notably clean in design and finish. I admire their workmanship with a passion, and so, no doubt in the world, would Mr. George Horace Lorimer. But he would not buy.

• • • •

NOW my antithesis is, of course, farcical. There is not a piece in this book which could be submitted to the Saturday Evening Post with any more good judgment than that a friend of mine once exercised in forwarding a long epic poem to Vanity Fair. Yet when one considers other and less remunerative markets, when one remembers the vast number of magazines which exist in this country, this absolution from commercial intent is not so easy. I believe not even the editors, despite the pride of their scorn for the market place, would declare these writers free from the desire to turn an honest literary penny. After all, every bit of public print is commercial—it appeals to a wide and varied audience, and it asks a recompense of some kind. And that we see these manuscripts at all, that they have come out of the sphere of private letters and family readings (a most pleasant and valid sphere, too) is in itself a bid for that recompense.

How shall we repty? The fact is that a great proportion of these writings should have stayed in the private realm, where they belong. Solely by an accident—a combination of accidents extending from the project of "The New Caravan" itself, to the curious notion of our time that decent, connected fairly objective writing is immediately deserving of print—do we come upon the bulk of these pages in a bookstall. As private writings, as peeks into the lives and ideas of persons duly gazeteered in the biographical appendix, they can be delicious. But only, mark it, if you possess a kind of all-curiosity about human beings, and would exult to sit in a post-office—the stigma happily removed—and rifle and read first-class mail all day long. Only if you have a heart as wide as the late Mme. Schumann-Heink's for all young and ambitious effort. And only if you hold a personal steadiness so sure that you yourself supply the balance wheel in your reading, and do not need to ask it in what you read.

But when writings are brought to the public counter, and partake of the permanence (how vain an idea nowadays) of books, the authors cannot appeal to any one of these excuses. Nor should criticism lend them an ear. That great, perdurable reading public, to be unfashionably confined of generalities, is by no means all-curious about every manner and grade of human beings, it does not, ipso facto, adore green effort, and most assuredly it is more anxious to learn poise and maturity than it is sanguine of applying these powers.

RECALL, if you will, the great characters of literature—those, observe, about whom the public is most enduringly curious to hear—and ask yourself if they do not possess some very marked common denominators. Recall the general flavor of work which can stand up before the bar of time—which means nothing more than that it has pleased several generations of readers—and ask yourself if even its possible green spots (I am thinking at the moment, warily, of "Pickwick Papers") are not more than balanced by elements which repudiate greenness.

Yet in "The New Caravan," which is but a token of a vast spread of ambitious current writing, there is a tell-tale shyness from even attempting to create good characters, let alone great ones. (I must absolve Sherwood Anderson's very surprising story from this.) It is as if the simple axiom that you can't be 6 feet tall before you have been 4 and 5 were an unfathomable myatery to these authors. And the general flavor of their writing, not the technical excellence but the over-tones, is such as to lead us to believe that the sole virtue they see is greenness.

Their dissection of character and motive, for example, is admirably acute; the probing is delicate, and the scalpel consummately wielded. But an omission then occurs which need not be over-looked, since it happens to be the prime fault of modern literature. For the process stops with dissection; nothing is put together; nothing grows and lives with any vitality, any assertion, any faith; and the product remains but half-truth to human nature. After all, surgeons fall in love, but that seems to be a feat of synthesis beyond the imagination of these authors.

AND lastly, there is the peculiar disclaimer, in the preface, to the effect that the editors "never have had a totalitarian vision of the life of the land." This may be editorial innocence. But from the reports of the writers this country looks like a place where no good ever happens, where there are no such aims as balance or maturity, where anything pleasant or rewarding or invigorating is entirely absent, and where, in a word, the sun never shines. And if it did, to believe them, it wouldn't warm a pebble or grow a mustard seed. Totalitarian?—you haven't seen such a row of mourners since the last "Caravan" came out!

Well, I don't recognize that country, and you don't. I don't want to read about that country, and you don't. And the great tradition of readers never did.

Time has fortunately screened us from past attempts to raise private, idiosyncratic, immature writings to the stage of literature. There is but one thing new about this present endeavor. The novelty is presented to our risibilities of seeing a solemn caravan wind by us which has no oasis within sight, is headed for no oasis, and doesn't even believe in oases. The camel-drivers hoist the banner of a complete futility. Doubtless they have read Ecclesiastes, but they missed the life-giving kernel.

In the Reign of Kao Tsu

Jagendorf Bases Story of Han Dynasty on Historical Facts

"IN THE DAYS OF THE HAN," by M. Jagendorf. (Suttonhouse, $3.)

The Han dynasty is perhaps the most glorious of China's long history, and its founder, Liu Pang, whom we had better call by his dynastic title, Kao Tsu, reigned from 206 to 195 B. C., and was truly an enlightened ruler. Brave and strong in fight, he could have ruled his empire from the back of a horse, but he chose a more difficult path. Kao Tsu led his people with virtue and wisdom so that after his death over 400 years the country enjoyed peace and prosperity.

The thrilling story of Mr. Jagendorf is laid in the early period of Kao Tsu's reign, and centers around three youthful figures—Ln Sung, the only son of a fur merchant, typifies courage; his beautiful sister, Tu-ling, that of self-sacrifice, and Chimsiru of the northern bowmen, that of loyalty. With our hearts full of anxiety, we follow the dangerous adventures of Sung and Chimsiru and the fate of Tu-ling caught in the dark intrigue of the court.

Such characteristically Oriental virtues as loyalty, filial piety and that love and devotion between warring enemies guide the course of the romance, and very fittingly the author concludes the book with a quotation from the most ancient of the Chinese classical books: "The glory and tranquillity of a nation may arise from the goodness of a single human being."

The story is based on historical facts, and the author keeps true to the Chinese spirit and ideals. The language is simple and direct, and at times the story rises to the dignity of an old saga. Unfortunately many of the illustrations are not true to the period, costumes of men and women being that of the Manchu dynasty and not that of the Han.

Five Daring Young Men

The following is part of the introduction written by William Saroyan to his new book, "Three Times Three." It tells how the Conference Press, which published his book, came into being:

"Four young men (Edward Babigian, a countryman of mine; Gilbert Harrison, William Okie and Hal Levy) from the University of California at Los Angeles, came to visit me one afternoon in November, 1936, at Ben Schulberg's in Hollywood, where I was writing stuff for possible use in moving pictures, and one of them wondered what I would do if American publishers suddenly decided not to publish my stuff.

"I said I would bust out laughing and publish the stuff myself.

"I said, there's nothing magic about writers or writing and nothing magic about anything else, including publishers and publishers . . . Who the hell are publishers? I'm a publisher myself, if I'm in the mood . . .

"In less than six minutes we decided to publish a book. We selected a color, black, for the cover. We founded a company: Conference Press. And we decided on publication date, December 10, 1936.

"What the hell is a book? In case American publishers don't know it, they're kidding themselves.

"We neither expect, hope nor want The Book-of-the-Month Club to select this book. We, in turn, refuse to recognize (accept or select) The Book-of-the-Month Club. Who the hell are they?"

Jane Austen

The following excerpts from Margaret Lawrence's book, "The School of Femininity" (F. A. Stokes Co.) are published herewith in honor of Jane Austen's birth which occurred exactly 161 years ago today:

"Not even today is there a woman writer who has so deftly combined sophistication with romance as Miss Austen did at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Nor is there another woman writer down through the years of women's writing who has been so elusive of herself in her books. • • • One woman said that Miss Austen was a giddy person who liked to flirt with men, and who would rather dance than do anything else. Another woman said she was a prim, sharp-tongued old maid.

"All the novels (of Miss Austen) are objective in appearance. Here is a woman, we may almost think, who successfully lost herself in portraying other people. There is no one character among her women who shadows herself through all the others, haunting the books as the creator of them. • • • She presented the novels smoothed out, and lightsome in their tone. They are happy; almost jaunty in their happiness. It was a miracle of technique—to take the matrimonial merry-go-round of middle-class women, in which she herself had been a failure, and make it a little planet by itself.

"But suddenly she was tired. At 40. Her novels were getting recognition in high critical places. But she had come to the time when biology laughs at women who have evaded its laws. Six perfect novels; an extraordinarily talented woman. Erotically starved. • • • She gave up. • • • She was glad to die."

Story of Cape Cod Life

Frederick Wright's Second Book Deals With New England's Seafaring

"THE CHRONICLE OF AARON KANE," by Frederick Wright. (Farrar, Rinehart, $3.)

Books which concern themselves, in epic style, with the life of a hero have a habit of beginning with either the birth or death of this central character. Exceptions there are, of course—"Gone With the Wind," hardly an example of the classic tradition otherwise, utilized the approved 'in media res' beginning to plunk a full-grown Scarlett down on the front steps of Tara; "Anthony Adverse," which oldsters will recall as the "Gone With the Wind" of its day, made a whole Book I out of the romance between Anthony's parents. While no score card has been kept, one reader has discovered that of the two beginnings in such common use—birth or death—the more interesting volumes seem to lean toward maternity. Nor is the score reversed by "The Chronicle of Aaron Kane," which starts right off with what the minister said at Aaron's funeral and introduces into this solemn chapter cryptic statements which presumably whet the reader's interest for the 559 pages to follow.

What Mr. Wright hoped to do in this, his second novel, was to reveal the Spiritual History of Aaron Kane (the capitals are his own). The publishers confidently assert that he has combined with that "something never before achieved in American letters . . . the whole chronicle of the New England seafaring years and the characteristic shape of Cape Cod life, crystallized in this story of one man." It seems doubtful that many will agree with this enthusiastic blurb, but it is nearer true than most such cover-flap superlatives.

Obviously a great deal of research went into the writing of this story of a New Englander who began his seafaring as cabin boy on a Liverpool packet, and sailed as a young man to every part of the world. Eventually he became captain of his own vessel, which was sunk by a Confederate gunboat; married and was deserted by a lovely French girl; shot his brother, fought in the Civil War (for one day), watched his only son die of yellow jack, and returned home to marry a stolid New England maid named Martha, who had loved him a long, long time. There the story stops, the last half-century or more of Kane's life having included nothing of importance, the author explains, in regard to his Spiritual History.

But for all this crowded canvas, for all his research, and for all his careful descriptions (the author is a painter and sees with a painter's eyes), "The Chronicle of Aaron Kane" never quite comes off. Aaron moves through the crowded pages of the book, as carefully carved as the figurehead on one of his ships—and as wooden. This second novel contrasts sharply with Mr. Wright's first, "South." That was the story of a painter who went below the Mason-Dixon line to find new subjects for his brush, and the book was filled with vivid life.

Both books have an added value through the paintings which serve as illustrations of the spirit of the writing, although they are not of characters involved in the plot. Not only for these, but for his unmistakable ability as a writer, a third volume by Mr. Wright will be awaited with interest. If he can combine the reality of "South" with the varied movements and descriptions he has done so well here, his next work will be an undoubted success.

"I was in the Navy Department in Washington, D. C., on business the other day," writes Mr. Reed, "and I noticed a sign on the door of the Secretary's office which read 'Secretary of the Navy.' Underneath was a smaller sign which read 'Secretary of the Navy Pro Tempore.' I asked the guard what the difference was between the two signs and he said that the first sign was for the Secretary of the Navy and the second sign was for the Secretary of the Navy when he was out."

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 15.

I have always counted Claudette Colbert a smart business woman; at her home last evening this opinion was strengthened. Conversation had swung around to the ever interesting subject of earning and saving money. Comparisons between old and new stars came up, and it is shocking how few of yesterday's highly paid players are financially secure today. It is equally gratifying that most of today's stars are salting away for the rainy season.

MAE WEST.

"The one vital mistake many are making," Claudette commented, "is that they are paying last year's taxes out of this year's income.

I asked Miss Colbert how she is guarding against such exigency. Her plan is sensible. On January 2, her business manager presents a statement of her estimated income for the coming year, based on contracts signed and anticipated, plus dividends. Claudette divides the total taxes by 52, and each week sets aside from her salary 1/52 of her total taxes.

Mae West showed me two fan letters in her scrapbook. Both are from one woman, and the first reads: "My husband and I have been married for 15 years and although he is kind and considerate, he seldom shows me any affection. What can I do?" Mae wrote an advice-to-the-lovelorn reply to which she appended, "Let your husband read this."

A few days later came the second letter which is pasted in Mae's book. It reads: "I did as you said, and he blacked both my eyes."

From time to time I receive inquiries as to the nature of Greta Garbo's lingering illness which so often delays production of her pictures. The ailment is diagnosed as pernicious anemia, of which her sister, Alma, died soon after Greta came to America. The illness has a tendency to ravage the body, and though Garbo eats heavily of starchy foods which would make most women overweight, she rarely gains more than a pound or so above her subnormal average.

MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

Too Many Signals.

Most players are entirely too prolific in their use of signal cards. It is difficult to formulate general rules that will tell players when and when not to signal, but the following advice will, I hope, be found valuable.

Against slam contracts, do practically no signaling. There is no assurance that your partner can even win the lead, and if he does he ought to be able to make the right return without any direction from you. A signal from you will almost inevitable help the declarer much more than it will help your partner.

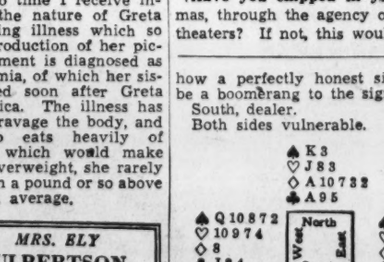
South, dealer.

Both sides vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 N T	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 N T	Pass	4 N T	Pass
6 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

North was a shade too timid in his bidding, but South made up for it, and the slam was correctly reached anyway.

West refused to jeopardize the Queen of spades or the Jack of clubs by leading away from either, and therefore opened the four of hearts, dummy's Jack was played, West covered and declarer won with the Ace. The diamonds were now started, and, to declarer's disgust, East was proved to have the suit stopped. On the second diamond lead West discarded the eight of spades, and when declarer went ahead to clear the diamonds, West followed with the two of spades and the four of hearts. East won the fourth round of diamonds, and obediently shifted to the six of spades; South played the Jack, figuring that it was a free finesse. West covered with the Queen, and dummy's King won. Declarer now led to his King of hearts, and followed this with three rounds of clubs, ending in the dummy.

At this point there were only three cards left in all hands: dummy held a low spade, a low heart and the fifth diamond; declarer had only the Ace-nine of spades and the five of hearts; West was down to the ten-seven of spades and the ten of hearts.

Dummy now played its last diamond. Declarer discarded his heart, and West was "fixed." If he let go the heart, dummy's eight-spot would be good, and a spade discard would establish declarer's Ace-nine. Moreover, on West's previous urgent spade signal, declarer was able to recognize that this situation existed, and thus would not have been tempted to finesse against a possible ten of spades in East's hand.

Another New Picture House Planned for Northeast; We Get Ourselves Upon the Jacket of a New Volume

The Newton Theater Will Be the Newest Addition to the Capital's Growing List of Residential Houses; Mr. Henderson Pens a Note and Announces Another Cornell Transcontinental Tour; An Old Friend Comes to Life up in Connecticut, Through Marsha Hunt's Genial Dad.

AND the theater building activity to which the National Capital recently has become addicted still goes on.

It seems that there just now has reached the building department of the District government, or whatever it is called, an application for the erection of a new two-story theater building at 3601 Twelfth street northeast. The edifice is stated to represent an investment of $40,000 and is under the direction of Davis, Wick and Rosengarten, construction engineers.

BELL.

The architect for the new house is John J. Zink, noted Baltimore theater designer who has to his credit the Rialto, Uptown and other local playhouses of the first rank.

Mr. Zink is known to the trade as the man who can contrive more unusual features for the motion picture theaters he designs than any other architect, not excepting Tom Lamb, who erected the Tivoli, Ambassador and others of our local palaces of the cinema.

The "Temple of Apollo" lobby of the Rialto was the first of the Zink creations to crash local consciousness; the peculiarly effective indirect lighting system in vogue at the Uptown, the newest of the Warner Brothers' residential theaters, the latest.

Mr. Zink knows his way around his drawing board.

Nat Dorfman, one of the drama's most stalwart advocates, has suddenly become chief publicist for the Max Gordon productions. A genial and welcome visitor to the tesselated elegance of this department yesterday, he trod slightly on the heels of that eminent gentleman of the theater, Wallace Munro, in behalf of a new thing to be done at the National with Frances Starr, otherwise Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson, of Washington, in the stellar role.

Mr. Dorfman leads one to believe that "The Two Mrs. Carrolls"—that happening to be the name of the piece—has run for a year in London and brings back to this country for the first time in a brace of decades, or thereabouts, a producer by the name of Mr. B. A. Meyer, whose adventures on this side of the Atlantic have been a bit hectic. In this one Mr. Meyer is thought to have a hit.

• • • •

So the postman rings once and leaves a letter from that most distinguished of the theater's stentors, Ray Henderson, of the Katharine Cornell-Guthrie McClintic organization, who writes as follows—if you can do with a bit of bragging:

"Dear Nelson Bell: You will be interested, I feel, in the jacket of the published edition of 'The Wingless Victory.' Personally, I am delighted at what the printers have done, and as soon as the book is off the press I shall send you a copy.

"I feel I never properly have expressed my gratitude, not only for what you did for 'The Wingless Victory,' but for what you always do. With best wishes, yours sincerely (Signed) RAY HENDERSON."

One gathers from this and certain other evidence that he has been quoted on the wrapper of the book edition of Maxwell Anderson's distinguished play in which Katharine Cornell recently premiered in the National Theater. I am grateful for the honor and for Mr. Henderson's kindly words forecasting it.

But then, I am always grateful to Mr. Henderson, as I am to Katharine Cornell and Guthrie McClintic, his principals, for making this job a little easier than it would be without them.

Speaking of Katharine Cornell, she told W. S. Stiegler, of the Cincinnati Times-Star, that within one or two seasons she expects to make another long tour of America in a repertory of three or four plays, including Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan," a new Shakespearean drama and probably her present production of Anderson's "The Wingless Victory." Let us hope that Washington will be included in the itinerary of this new swing around the circle.

From away down in Little Rock, Ark., comes a letter from Karl Wray, who still reads The Post, no matter how far from the point of production. Mr. Wray seems primarily interested in the selection of the "ten best pictures of the year," recently nominated by Harry Leo Horowitz, but as an afterthought he takes the trouble to submit a list of his own of the "ten best." Here they are:

"The Story of Louis Pasteur." "Modern Times." "The Ghost Goes West," "The Petrified Forest," "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." "These Three," "Libeled Lady," "The General Dies at Dawn," "Under Two Flags" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

"May I add, Mr. Bell," says Mr. Wray, "that 'way down in the South here, I still keep up with your columns and reviews and find them interesting always."

Those are kind words.

A brief call from Marsha Hunt's father yesterday afternoon served to unearth still another bond of common interest between us beyond the fact that we both are Hoosiers and think Marsha is a pretty grand kid to have got as far as she has at an age that still is measured in 'teens. Mr. Hunt made it known that a Connecticut neighbor of his is Kilbourne Gordon, former Washingtonian, who at one time wrote theater reviews for this desk under its present occupant, although in an earlier incarnation. Kil went on to greater things on Broadway and produced, among other notable stage offerings, "The Cat and the Canary," "Big Game" and additional items that eventually found their way to the screen as well as the stage.

Although, except for the consideration of physical proportions, there seems to be no valid reason for the substitution, it is being bruited about that Brian Aherne will succeed Robert Keith in the role of Iago in Max Gordon's presentation of Robert Edmond Jones' production of Shakespeare's "Othello," at the National, come the end of the week.

It seems to me that Iago's lines are especially well read by Mr. Keith, although there is no gainsaying that Aherne did valiant service with Katharine Cornell in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," in the role of Robert Browning, the poet; with Helen Hayes in the film version of "What Every Woman Knows" and in many other celluloid assignments of the first rank, including "I Live My Life," with Joan Crawford—in which, as I have said before, neither one did!

Gentle-Reminder Note.

Have you chipped in your toy yet for the "forgotten kids'" Christmas, through the agency of The Washington Post, WJSV and the Loew theaters? If not, this wouldn't be too soon.

One of Them Has That Crazy Laugh

One guesses that the crazy laugh referred to in the topline surmounting this gorgeous art display emanates from the gentleman to the right. At any rate, they are Olsen and Johnson, two of the stage's most completely maniacal comics who are soon to be seen on the screen in "Country Gentlemen," a production which, it is said, will rock the world with mirth. It sounds reasonable, if you know your Olsen and Johnson.

SYNOPSIS.

Doris Lee has been snowbound for almost a week in the mountain cabin of a man whom she suspects is Dr. George Grayson. He has refused to tell her who he is. From the servants, an Indian, Teck, and his wife, Chicquita, Doris gathers that George is not hiding in the mountains. But why he—young, handsome, talented—should live in utter seclusion in a Jemez mountain cabin, she does not know. She knows only that he resents her presence, though he himself had saved her life when she was lost in the blizzard. She cannot reconcile his churlishness with the occasional flashes of affection. For her part, Doris has met churlishness with impudence and anger, affection with affection.

Doris never guesses that much of George's surliness is caused by suspicions of her. On the night he rescued her from the blizzard he heard a radio police call which described a girl bank robber, Polly Donnelly, who had robbed a bank. The fugitive was believed to have escaped into the mountains, and her description fitted Doris. When George sought to question Doris about her reason for being on the mountain, she indignantly derided the implication that she might be a fugitive—but George is convinced of her identity when Teck brings in the contents of her coupe, all marked with the initials, P. D.

George decides that, right or wrong, he will help her to escape. Disguised as Indians, they are to drive Teck's old car down the mountain as soon as the snowplows come up.

Patrick, George's big German police dog, insists on going with them, and they hide him in the back seat of the old sedan. On their way down they meet a carful of officers going up the mountain.

Now go on with the story:

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

George's first thought was to step on the gas, but that thought died in the making and he swung to the side of the road and stopped his car.

One of the officers left the official car, strolled over across the road to Teck's disreputable little car. "Who are you?" his voice was commanding.

For an instant Doris' heart stood still. She had heard Patrick's involuntary move of resentment. But he did not bark or growl. George's last uttered command held him.

Not Suspicious.

"Name's Pablo," George said huskily. Doris could have sworn it was Gus, the voice certainly seemed like an Indian's voice. Surely no one could possibly suspect.

The officer did not. "Where are you going?"

The officer glanced over the car scornfully. It's a caution to me how you fellows ever expect to get anywhere with a bus like that. Who is this with you? Your woman?"

George grunted in assent.

"Did you see any white woman up there? Any strange white woman?"

And George grunted again. Doris couldn't tell the difference between the grunts but evidently the officer could because he took this one as a negative sign.

"All right, be on your way," the officer said good naturedly, and turning, went back to the official car.

George tried the starter but the car did not start. Then, with quick wit he released the brake. Fortunately they were on the down grade and within an instant or two, as the car rolled along on its own weight and momentum, the engine took hold and the old cylinders took up their laborious firing.

Relief.

"Oh boy," George's sigh was like a small explosion. "I hate to think what could have happened if the car had got stalled. If I'd had to get out and try to start the thing that officer would have been onto our disguise sure as can be."

"I thought Patrick would bark," Doris laughed nervously. "Every minute I expected it."

"I didn't. Patrick will obey. But if the officer had started to look under the robe it would have been a different matter."

"Well, we're safe anyway," Doris ventured.

Her companion was not so much at ease about that. "Not as safe as we might be. We've eluded those officers, but any minute we may meet another car. There are probably dozens of cars out. Probably they are following every snow plow that cuts through."

"Don't worry, George," but Doris' own eyes were troubled.

Keep Car.

But George shook his head at that. "How could we abandon the car? We've got Patrick. We may be able to disguise ourselves but there isn't any way in the world that we could disguise Patrick. We'll have to keep the car to take him along."

"Unless we leave him somewhere."

George scoffed that idea. "How could we leave him? We tried that once. He would have been safe with Chicquita and Teck."

"Then we'll keep him safe with us somehow," Doris promised. She reached her hand back to pat the dog's great, beautiful head. "We'll keep you safe, won't we, old fellow?"

Patrick growled, the deep, tender growl that meant he understood.

"That's right," Doris said, pushing the robe back. "Keep your head out when you can. You may have to cover up again after awhile. We're likely to meet another car with officers."

But if they did meet another car of officers George and Doris were not aware of the fact.

It was warm down in the valley. The sun shone brightly and from sheer discomfort because of their warmth Doris and George were obliged to discard a part of their outer wraps.

Off Highway.

They traversed roads that were hard now, some of them merely trails. George had decided they must leave the main highways. There, passing cars constantly, it would be very easy for someone to become suspicious of them. "We'll get out of New Mexico just as quickly as we can," he had decided. "Then we can get our breath and decide what we ought to do next."

"A breathing spell," Doris laughed. The farther they got away from the mountain cottage the higher her spirits were soaring.

But it wasn't such a breathing spell at that. George had continual trouble with the old car. The old boat might have been willing to obey Teck but it certainly did not understand the language with which George addressed it.

It seemed to Doris that for every mile they went they lost the time to go 10 miles when they stopped to tinker with the car. The fan belt broke and George patched it as best he could. He had to replace a spark plug and drove miles and miles along a road that was only a trail until he could find a tiny out-of-the-way oil station that carried even spark plugs.

Most people paid no particular attention to them.

On these out-of-the-way mountainous trails they were merely a pair of Indians, coming from some place and going some place else. But in one oil station the attendant, a rough-looking individual, made George pay for the gas before he would put it into the car.

"I take no chances," he told George.

Almost Caught.

"That's O. K. Here's the money," George said, counting it out. "Now, get going." There was a command to his voice that made the oil station man look up sharply. "Looky here. Who are you?"

"Pablo," George muttered.

"Pablo? Well, if you're an Indian you're a darned queer looking one." He caught at the disreputable headgear that was a part of George's attire and would have pulled it off, but in a flash George pushed him back. "Step back, you. I paid you for the gas. Give it to me. And get a move on you."

Quick as a flash the oil station attendant grabbed at the gas pump and started to fill the tank. This fellow might not be an Indian, but as far as the attendant was concerned there'd be no more argument. All he wanted was to get this customer on his way quickly.

Doris' time and attention were held with trying to keep Patrick quiet. The dog had sensed the hostility of this man toward his master and he stood now in the back of the car, growling deep in his throat, waiting for George's command.

George started the car. And this time it rolled. "Shut up, Patrick," he told the dog, once they were out of earshot of the station attendant.

"He didn't believe we were Indians," Doris said. "It was a foolish statement and she knew it at the time. But she was so nervous that words, just any words, helped.

"No, he didn't," George agreed. "That makes me surer than ever that we must get rid of these Indian clothes."

But they did not get rid of them that day.

Night came swiftly. "We'll have to find a place where we can stay for the night," George decided. "I guess you're hungry. I know I am. Those hot dog sandwiches we had at noon weren't very filling."

Tired and Hungry.

"They were all right." Doris was determined to be cheerful about it, but she was weak from fatigue and hunger.

"Some kind of a camp," George decided. "One of these little, out-of-the-way cabin camps. And I can get something from a grocery store that we can heat up for our supper. We wouldn't dare stop in a village of any size yet."

Rep. Bloom Favors Monumental Hall

Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, said yesterday he is in the ranks of those favoring a monumental auditorium hall as a memorial to Thomas Jefferson, rather than a mass of marble in West Potomac Park or elsewhere.

"Let's have something original, something with a little heart in it," urged the veteran Democratic legislator who had charge of the George Washington Bicentennial and who is now steeped in plans for next year's sesquicentennial of the Constitution, which he is directing.

He envisaged a building that could be put to all the uses of a Madison Square Garden and, besides, house a collection of Jefferson's written works.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Dec. 15.—A trip to New Orleans led Cecil B. De Mille, old maestro of the bathtub motif, to give up his quest for a "beautiful brute," and go pirating in a film called "Buccaneer."

De Mille was set to do "Sampson and Delilah" and went full tilt after a "dazzling but beastly" beauty to play the feminine title role until he previewed his "Plainsman" in the Gulf City and went fishing with E. V. Richards, New Orleans theatrical magnate.

Now, the biblical theme is off and "Buccaneer"—a history of Jean Lafitte, French freebooter of the Gulf Coast, who joined forces with Andrew Jackson against the British in the War of 1812—is on.

Sucker for Pirate Gold.

Reason for the switch is De Mille always has been a sucker for tales of pirate gold and treasure hunts. Richards took him out on the gulf to fish for tarpon, but they wound up treasure-hunting on Barataria Island, Lafitte's old haunt. De Mille found no doubloons, but did develop a yen for a pirate picture.

Returning to Hollywood, De Mille found "Buccaneer," a pirate play by Maxwell Anderson, in his portfolio, but decided it wouldn't do because the central figure is Henry Morgan, the gent who looted Panama.

Blithely he lifted the title and set his crew of storymen to tailor one to Lafitte's measure. Much of the picture will probably be shot in the Bayou country, which will give Cecil B. another fling at Lafitte's lost.

Bachelors and Survivors.

Chevy Chase Bus Line Extenson Is Proposed

Several blocks of residences in Chevy Chase will be incorporated in the Chevy Chase bus loop if the District joint board adopts a proposed change in route approved yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission.

The route will be altered at the Northwest terminal. Instead of turning off Western avenue at Tennyson street, the buses will proceed to Pinehurst Circle, and then turn into Utah avenue.

Bonus and Pay Raises Given Plant Employes

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luray, Va., Nov. 15.—Checks ranging from $100 to $1,000 were distributed to surprised guests of the Casey Jones board of directors at a banquet last night. Guests were managers, foreladies and members of the executive branch of the seven factories throughout the Shenandoah Valley, West Virginia and Maryland. The total amount distributed was not divulged.

Harry Weinberg, Baltimore, president of the company, stated that beginning Friday there would be a 10 per cent increase in the pay rolls, affecting 900 employes.

Yule Party Sponsored.

Hagerstown, Md.—The Junior Chamber of Commerce announced yesterday that it is again sponsoring a Christmas party at a local theater Christmas morning for underprivileged children. Local merchants will supply the presents. Fifteen hundred children attended last Christmas.

Hoover Directs Bandit Capture In Gun Battle

Suspect Surrenders After Bullet Barrage; Wife Is Shot.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 15.—Trapped in an upper West Side hideout by flames, tear gas and slashing gunfire, a two-gun desperado from the Midwest surrendered to a small army of policemen and Federal agents today after a frenzied 45-minute battle.

The prisoner, Harry Brunette, 28, of Green Bay, Wis., faced a multitude of charges, including bank robbery in Wisconsin, kidnaping and jail breaking.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation who personally led 40 agents in the raid, announced late in the day that a full confession had been obtained.

Describing Brunette as "the toughest criminal I've seen," Hoover quoted him as saying he was determined to resist to death, but decided to quit, when he was cut off from his ammunition after emptying his two six-shooters at the besiegers.

Wife Is Wounded.

Again it apparently was a case of "cherchez la femme." Detectives who worked with the Federal men disclosed Brunette was traced to an arsenal-like apartment through his bride of less than a month.

Half way through the battle for which she unwittingly had set the stage, the woman, clad in pink pajamas and man's topcoat, staggered out of th eflame and bullet-swept apartment with a wound in the thigh.

She was the only casualty of the riping cross-fire that threw the congested neighborhood into turmoil and sent tenants of nearby Riverside Drive apartments diving under their beds.

She was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where her injury was termed slight. She identified herself as the former Arline Lebeau, 28, of New York. Hoover said her husband implicated her in the kidnaping of a New Jersey State trooper.

The capture of Brunette followed the most spectacular gun battle Manhattan has witnessed since Francis (Two Gun) Crowley was blasted from an apartment a dozen blocks away in 1931 and sent on his way to the electric chair for killing a policeman.

More than 150 bullets were pumped into the apartment by the attackers.

An exploding tear-gas bomb set fire to a sofa, and when Brunette finally tossed away his two pistols and surrendered the place was a shambles of broken pottery, fallen plaster and scorched furniture.

Beginning at 1 a. m., when Brunette answered Hoover's pounding on the steel-paneled door with a volley of shots and a taunt to "come and get me," the rattle of gunfire and the crash of window panes brought more than 100 policemen and several fire trucks screaming to the scene.

Firemen dodged through the hail of lead trying to extinguish the flames while the battle was in full tilt.

The cowering Brunette, cut off from his ammunition supply in another room by a steady enfilade of sub-machine gun and high-powered rifle bullets, finally yelled quits.

His capture spurred a Nation-wide search for Merle Vandenbush, 29, who was described by Government men as Brunette's companion in crime. Hoover said Brunette named Vandenbush as his accomplice in a series of bank robberies at Monroe, Ripon and Seymour, Wis., and in the kidnaping of William A. Turnbull, a New Jersey State trooper.

Turnbull, who participated in the battle, identified the prisoner as one of the gun-toting trio who seized him when he stopped their car for speeding near Somerville, N. J., last November 11 and carried him to Freemansburg, Pa., where they tossed him into a ditch after stripping him of his uniform.

Brunette's wife, whom he married November 27, under the name of "Robert Lake," unknowingly led officers to his hiding place. Detectives spotted her several days ago and followed her to 102d street, where they lost her. A house-to-house canvass convinced them their quarry was in No. 304. They notified Federal agents and the raid followed.

Arsonist Jailed for Life In Apartment Fatality

Paterson, N. J., Dec. 15 (AP).—Hayward Adams, 23, was sentenced to life imprisonment yesterday on a charge of murder resulting from one of 25 fires which he admitted setting within little more than a year.

Thomas Gilmour, superintendent of an apartment house, was fatally burned October 4 while arousing tenants after Adams had fired the building.

Peace Parley Planned In Mexico's Oil Strike

Mexico City, Dec. 15 (AP).—A capital-labor congress to seek an end to labor troubles hampering Mexico's half billion dollar oil industry was drafted today by oil operators and labor representatives.

Conferees, sparring for advantages in discussion of a blanket collective labor contract demanded by workers, indicated at the end of today's meeting that the conciliation congress would be called within a week or ten days.

French Truckmen Strike.

Paris, Dec. 15 (AP).—While a strike of truck farmers threatened tonight to keep fresh foodstuffs out of Paris, ship strikers at Le Havre agreed to submit their demands to government arbitration and the liner Champlain prepared to sail for New York.

'Incessant Talker' Now In 10th Day; Hope Fades

Ocala, Fla., Dec. 15 (AP).—As 44-year-old Howard Stillman entered the tenth day of almost incessant talking, physicians said tonight they feared he had only a little longer to live. Dr. J. L. Chalker said Stillman, a farmer, gave slight indications of rallying today, but added this was only temporary.

Since he started talking December 5, Stillman barely has paused. He declines to eat, saying he would have to stop his conversation. A psychiatrist agreed with Dr. Chalker in diagnosing Stillman's ailment as possibly "a mucous condition of the brain or a tumor pressing against the speech-controlling section."

Miss Richards Defers Talks.

Motley's Band At Dude Ranch Highly Praised

By Chanticleer.

After-darkers are singing the praises of this new Berk Motley band at the Dude Ranch, according to latest word from my spies. Motley is an exponent of swing as she should be swung.

The band comes to the suburban spot after 30 weeks on the pier at St. Petersburg, Fla., and has played the John Marshall in Richmond, several places at Atlantic City and has taken a whirl over the theater circuits. And, of course, the inevitable movie shorts.

• • • •

What ho! An added attraction at the Mayfair. Comes now Otis Manning, "Magician Moderne," to befuddle the faculties of the afternoon cocktailers and supper diners. Manning's reputation is based on his success as a "close up" performer. He does his tricks right under your very noses—at your table. Which, no doubt, increases the difficulties of pulling odds and ends of props from out the vest pocket. Carl Poindexter, Jack Campbell and Roy Kiser provide the music.

• • • •

Jimmy Crandall, host at Brinkley's, is practicing already for his role as Santa Claus. He believes in giving his youngsters everything he can for their Christmas thrills . . . Don't forget there is dancing at Griffith Farms every Saturday night. Dinner without dancing other nights of the week . . . Jimmy Bright is now at Maryland Club Gardens. Same Jimmy Bright you've known at the Madrillon and other Washington spots. He works with Charlie Jeter, the organ-playing gentleman of the Crystal Bar.

• • • •

The Russians at Helen Hamilton's Russian Troika are preparing for a big Christmas celebration. Preparing for just an ordinary celebration is done on a grand scale by the Russians. But this Christmas event is to be the business. You see, the Russian observes two Christmases—ours and his own, a few weeks later.

The casting gentlemen at Cocoanut Grove are even now in New York signing talent for a whopping big New Year's Eve celebration for the K street rendezvous. In the meantime, Paul Tremaine surprised the customers by singing the lyrics to a tune his band was playing. Tremaine's specialty is hillbilly stuff. Don't forget the Cocoanut Grove dinner rate is now $1.

The Ambassador's Hi-Hat Room, in maintaining its boast of "never a dull moment," is presenting afternoon and night programs without duplication of tunes. Helen Malcolm positively insists on learning new numbers every week so that none will become monotonous. And, of course, the impromptu appearances of guests before the Hi-Hat mike keep the customers on their toes.

Seems if there's considerable movie talent represented in the entertainment this week at the Raleigh's new Pall Mall Room (and very pretty the new place is, too). The dancing Vernons, James and Evelyne, are under contract to Warners and whenever a whirlwind dance team is needed, the Vernons substitute for the stars. They doubled for Nelson Eddy and Jeannette McDonald in "Naughty Marietta." And for Joan Crawford and her partner in a rhumba number in a picture not yet released. Some of their numbers are "canned" and held ready to sneak into a picture as needed. Eddie Elkins, too, has provided orchestral music for Pathe shorts for such stars as Eddie Cantor, Ginger Rogers, Richard Dix and Maurice Chevalier.

• • • •

The Lotus opens its all-new Novelty Revue with the unusual dance team, Diane and Del Campo, in interpretations of Rachmaninoff's "Perlude" moving into the fast "La Cucaracha." Ted and Ethel Walker are featured in an eccentric dance and comedy cycle. Kay Koch does a few new things in the way of soft-shoe dancing and Mavis Abdullah gathers orchids with her waltz acrobatics. Little Judy Ellington sings. Bill Strickland and his boys for your dancing.

• • • •

Matt Windsor has lost a hard-fought battle for publicity with that other Winslow fellow from England. For two years Matt has been the most widely publicized Windsor in Washington. But not so these last few weeks. (In case you really don't know, Matt Windsor is your charming host at the Club Volga Boatman.) Referring to this last splurge of attention to England's abdicating monarch, Matt says he will claim a foul to gain back his lead.

Carl and Leone Bonner are back at the Shoreham—all at work preparing for the Shoreham's Christmas Toy Ball Friday night. Carl and Leone made themselves an enviable reputation with their singing last winter at this spot. About this ball: Commissioner Hazen will be present—and Santa Claus will be there—and Eddie Peabody and his banjo. Maxim Lowe's music for your dancing. A toy or article of clothing will be accepted in place of the usual cover charge. Extra added: The Randalls, dance team from Havana, are present this week.

Sextet to Die Jan. 18 in Chair At Sing Sing

By the Associated Press.

Ossining, N. Y., Dec. 15.—Six young men, and "all pretty scared now," paced nervously the cells in Sing Sing prison death house today as they awaited a 25-minute period during the week of January 4, when they will walk that last march to the electric chair. These six are the first of 15 condemned to die in the 15 days between January 4 and January 18.

The wisecracking and laughter they flaunted at their trial for the murder of Edwin Esposito, 22-year-old subway station agent, has been replaced by awkward, anxious silence.

"That was only an act," said Warden Lewis E. Lawes, "it's all gone now. They are just like the others, counting the minutes. They're not tough any more."

"It ought to take about 25 minutes for the executions. It used to take longer, but the electric chair has been improved."

The condemned are Eugene Bruno, 21; Joseph Bolognia, 24; Salvatore Scata, 18; Samuel Kimmel, 21; Dominic Zizzo, 26, and Theodore Di Donna, 31.

Bolognia, a former convict, was the man who sent two bullets into the ticket agent. When the station agent fell, he and the others grabbed several canvas bags filled with change and ran. When they tried to change the cash into bills they were captured.

At the trial, they appeared confident and swaggered in and out of the courtroom. Scata greeted District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan with, "How's the boy?"

When they were captured they appeared before motion-picture sound cameras which recorded their confessions, and grinned and laughed at each other's wisecracks.

Navy Yard Worker Found Dead in Car

Arthur Lind, 32-year-old Navy Yard employe, of 316 East Capitol street, was found dead of carbon monoxide poison in his automobile parked in a small woods on Sixth street extended northeast last night. Windows and doors of the car were tightly closed and sealed with paper.

The body was discovered by a passerby who was attracted by the automobile engine running in the lonely spot.

Two notes, one addressed to his mother, Mrs. S. V. Lind, New Haven, Conn., and another to police were found in the car. On the seat beside the dead man police found a bottle of whisky.

Police did not open the note addressed to Mrs. Lind. The note addressed to police read: "Naturally, you can see I did this thing myself," signed Arthur Lind.

Movie Kibitzer Is Held As Mail Fraud Suspect

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 15 (AP).—Kibitzing when he saw five aces dealt in a movie poker game caused the arrest of A. M. Patchin, wanted here on a mail fraud indictment, Clyde Hood, assistant district attorney, said today.

"Throw one of those aces away," Hood said Patchin shouted, leaping to his feet in a Los Angeles theater yesterday. A routine investigation showed the Federal charge against Patchin. Hood said he will be returned here for trial.

On the Air Today

The Mutual Broadcasting System begins coast-to-coast service December 29, with coincident affiliation with the Don Lee network in California. It is the most rapid expansion in the history of broadcasting as Mutual is not yet two years old.

Mutual's purpose is admirable: to provide its programs through well spotted stations in such a way as to minimize duplication in listening areas. With the addition of the Don Lee network, a point of origination will be obtained in Hollywood and hence a new reservoir of talent.

To start off the new Nation-wide service, Mutual will provide the New Year's Eve celebration from the most easterly point in North America—Halifax—and the East-West all-star grid battle from San Francisco the next day.

• • • •

Columbia will repeat its "Twelve Crowded Months" broadcast of last year. Already returns are beginning to come in from editorial offices over the country with selections of the "12 outstanding news stories of 1936."

These selections range from the consensus of staffs of entire newspaper offices to those of publishers, managing editors and news editors. According to the majority vote, the 12 most important stories will be dramatized the night of December 29.

• • • •

Hal Kemp and his orchestra leave the Phil Baker show, which has been renewed for another three months or so, to take over the orchestral spot left open by Andred Kostelanetz in withdrawing from the Friday night dance feature at WJSV.

Replacing Kemp on the Baker program will be the music of Oscar Bradley. Bradley's is not a familiar radio name although he directed Will Rogers' music and for the last two years has been screen maestro for Shirley Temple. He is British born but is now an American citizen. He also was musical director for Florenz Ziegfeld for a time, conducting the original productions of "Rio Rito," "Whoopie," "Show Boat" and others.

For the first time in his radio career Kemp will direct his own programs with the entire broadcast devoted to his ultramodern arrangements. Kay Thompson and the Rhythm Singers remain as vocal features of the program.

Incidentally, a notice arrives giving the razz to the frequent hints that Rubinoff would discontinue his connections with the extensive Chevrolet airings. The announcement states that Rubinoff has been re-signed and begins his seventh year simultaneously, January 10.

Ex-King Aging; Mourning Loss Of His Throne

Dejection Grips Edward; Short Film Showing Abdication Hurts.

By the Associated Press.

Enzesfeld, Austria, Dec. 15.—Edward of England was described tonight as morose, disheartened and suddenly aging since the swift march of events that cost him his throne for the love of Wallis Simpson.

The now Duke of Windsor is "in the depths of depression from which it seems impossible to arouse him," said one member of Baron Eugene Daniel Rothschild's household where Edward is a guest.

"The duke sat for an hour, his head bent low, and almost in tears, his face twitching, clasping and unclasping his hands while reading a telegram which I believe was from Mrs. Simpson at Cannes," said a servant.

The Rothschilds have respected his desire for quiet, but late today they attempted to bring him out of the depths.

Last night a short film was brought from Vienna for the duke's entertainment.

It was a news reel showing events of his abdication.

Duke Heavy Hearted.

Another film, reported to be "something light with a love interest" was ordered for tonight.

[Former King Edward is so "penniless" that he had to borrow money to get out of England, usually reliable persons told the United Press today. He reportedly obtained money from his mother, Queen Mary, to finance his flight into exile early last Saturday.—Editor's note.]

Household members said Windsor's hosts had tried to induce him to go into Vienna to visit bars or night clubs, whose rounds he made cheerfully and happily last September with Mrs. Simpson—but their efforts seemed unavailing.

This was interpreted to mean the duke was too physically indisposed or too heavy-hearted to think of visiting the joy spots which could not but recall his previous happy times.

He returned to his rooms after a half-hearted bit of practice-putting on the golf links before lunch, suffering a headache, an earache and an "emotional letdown."

Tires of Golf.

The duke tried a few swings, did a bit of putting, then gave up in disgust—miserable with aching ears and a throbbing head.

Plans were made for Edward's attendance Monday at the city's oldest theater, And Der Wien, where Mozart's "Magic Flute" first was presented.

The Duke is expected to see the current operetta "Axel and Der Himmels Tuer"—Axel at Heaven's door—in which Baron Rothschild's friend, Baroness Hatvany, blonde Hungarian, plays the feminine lead.

Several diplomats stationed at Vienna will be guests tomorrow at an informal luncheon within the chateau.

Much of the day the duke spent in bed and he spent some time dictating letters to his secretary and going through dispatches delivered in fat leather pouches.

Scans Future Plans.

It was indicated he was preparing correspondence for his beloved Mrs. Simpson to be sent to Cannes, and endeavoring to make some definite plans for his and her future.

Much of the duke's mail was from agents with castles of all descriptions for sale.

One report stated he was considering purchase of a chateau at Enzesfeld. Budapest dispatches said he was about to buy Count Bela Zichy's 4,000-acre estate on Lake Balaton.

Villas on the Dalmatian coast, the Island of Corfu, Corsica, at Cannes and in Greece were suggested to him.

Best information was that shortly he would rent a villa at Kitz-Buehel—the European home of Leander McCormick, of Chicago, was said to be under consideration.

Mayor Apologizes.

Cannes, France, Dec. 15 (AP).—Wallis Warfield Simpson got a big bouquet of flowers from the mayor today in an apology for the crowds which gathered about her during a shopping tour.

Mayor Pierre Nouveau sent a note along with the flowers expressing regret her visit had not been as peaceful as she might have desired and said he hoped the remainder of her stay here would be more quiet.

Detectives were called today to disperse the crowds which gathered after Mrs. Simpson, accompanied by a bodyguard and her host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Rogers, entered a store along La Croisette, Cannes' fashionable waterfront promenade.

Members of Kappa Gamma Sorority Hold Annual Banquet at Mayflower

Red carnations and red and gold candles representing the sorority colors were used as table decorations at the annual banquet of Kappa Gamma Sorority at the Mayflower last night when 80 members were initiated into Beta Chapter.

Dr. Jesse W. Sprowls, educational instructor for the program sponsored by the sorority, was introduced by Atha Jordan, president of the Alpha Chapter.

Dr. Sprowls spoke of the course beginning the first week in January in the clubrooms of the League of American Pen Women in the Grafton Hotel.

The new officers appointed are Helen Mobberley, president; Margaret E. Miller, vice president; Margaret Richardson, treasurer, and Margarey K. Hill, secretary.

The Childrens' Tuberculosis Hospital will have many happy little patients on Christmas morning, thanks to the generosity of the members of the District of Columbia Chapter of the United States Daughters of 1812 who brought toys and dolls to the meeting at national headquarters last night. The president, Mrs. Jane Schofield, presided at the meeting and thanked the members for their donations.

An illustarted talk on "The Madonna and Nativity Legend as Interpreted by the Old Masters," was given by Miss Grace Lincoln Temple at the meeting of the music and art sections of the Twentieth Century Club yesterday afternoon at the Y. W. C. A. Miss Katherine Riggs, harpist, gave a program of Christmas selections.

Christmas carols were sung and a Christmas play presented at the meeting of the Woman's Club of Bethesda yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Mary Crete Willis dramatized one of her recent short stories, "Merry England," and it was presented by a cast of club members. Included in the cast were Mrs. J. B. Hutson, Mrs. Edgar Hoyer, Mrs. Reginald Looker, Mrs. E. F. Kohman, Mrs. Louis A. Gravelle, Mrs. N. F. Rabner, Mrs. Harry J. Prie, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. E. P. Wilson, Mrs.

Edward Plans Sharp Answer To Archbishop

The Bishop of Durham, Dr. H. H. Henson, discussed the subject before a clerical gathering.

"I always have been trained to believe," he said, "that the Church of England was an episcopal church governed by the bishops reigning in their several dioceses.

"Now I find that it is coming to be some kind of a novel body governed by the British Broadcasting Corporation and two archbishops. (The reference was to the two ranking archbishops, Canterbury and York.)

"I do not like it."

"Hitting Man Down."

Letters to newspapers criticized the Canterbury radio sermon. One writer said: "His words, uttered at this moment, suggest the hitting of a man when he is down."

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express commented editorially:

"After the Archbishop of Canterbury comes Archdeacon Lambie of Australia, bravely firing the artillery of the church against a position already evacuated.

"They kept their thunder silent while the lines still were manned. Now the archbishop launches an attack against Edward's friends. The archdeacon blames the exotic entourage of the former King.

"The clergy should specify the persons they accuse—or else show some of the restraint they preach about."

"Unchristian," Letters Say.

The News Chronicle editorially mentioned that its "postbag contains many letters protesting that the primate's (Canterbury's) broadcast criticism of King Edward on Sunday night was untimely and even unchristian." The editorial concludes:

"Edward VIII has gone. To pursue the campaign can bring no benefit to the cause of the monarchy or Christian charity. The thing is finished."

Comment in the House of Commons led to the belief that not only the archbishop's remarks but Edward's farewell to the nation Friday would be raised in Parliament. Two questions likely will be posed:

1. Whether the church head's broadcast was made with the cabinet's approval.

2. Whether any cabinet members read the speech before it was delivered.

Mathematical Proof Claimed For Existence of Telepathy

By the Associated Press.

Durham, N. C., Dec. 15.—Experiments which he says mathematically prove the existence of telepathy were made public today by Prof. J. B. Rhine, of Duke University.

The odds against chance being the explanation of these results he says run into astronomical figures, not merely of millions or billions to one against, but up in the quintillions or sextillions.

Dr. Rhine has been making telepathy experiments for five years and these new results come from tests set up to meet criticisms of other scientists that the former proofs might have been due to involuntary whispering, sensory clews or habitual symmetry of mental patterns.

The telepathy was based on a special deck of 25 cards, whose faces bore one of five designs, a star, plus sign, wave, rectangle or circle. There were five of each in the pack.

Miss Sara Ownbey, Duke psychologist, imagined these cards, one after another, as they might lie in the pack. "Gz" another Duke psychologist, a man, sat with eyes closed and told card by card what Miss Ownbey was thinking. He did not always read her mind.

But when he sat beside her and called the whole pack 950 times, his average of right calls of her imaginary cards was 14 per pack. When he sat in the next room from her, his average was 14.8 in 750 packs and when he sat two rooms away his average was 16 cards right in each of 250 packs.

He gives some of the mathematical results in other, more startling experiments on clairvoyance, or "second sight."

"To give the odds against this being due to chance," Dr. Rhine says, "would require a number of 70 digits."

Market 'Rigging' Denied by Meehan

By the Associated Press.

Counsel for Michael J. Meehan told the Securities Commission late yesterday that a commission examiner's report accusing the Wall Street operator of manipulating stock was "biased and prejudiced."

Replying to charges against Meehan contained in a report by Trial Examiner William Green, Monroe Goldwater, Meehan's attorney, asserted that Green's conclusions were developed "almost wholly on assumption."

The report, he added, was inaccurate as to specific facts."

Green's report charged Meehan manipulated Bellanca Aircraft Corporation common stock in 1935 to create a "false and misleading appearance of active trading."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Who Is 'Keeping Company With Middle-Aged Man' Is Mystified by His Contradictory Court.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I seem to have more trouble with my men friends than any girl I know. I am keeping company at present with a middle-aged man who is in business for himself and who tells me I am his one and only girl, yet I know he takes other girls out to places of entertainment that he never takes me. The only time I see him is when I am passing by his house or when he drives by my house and sounds his horn to attract my attention. If I don't happen to hear his car he just drives away, and this often happens, because he frequently drives past after I have gone to bed . . . I just can't understand his ways.

• • • •

He says he cares for me and gets angry if I hint that he is going with other girls. He says I am fussing at him. He also tells me to go out with other fellows and have a good time, but I don't care to do that. I would rather stay at home and wait for him to come and sit and talk with him. But he seldom comes any more.

• • • •

He has said he wants to marry and that he expects to be married next spring. Since I have never had much luck with men friends, I had decided to settle down to this one. But now I am beginning to believe he doesn't care for me either. He hasn't acted much like it recently, nor does he ever speak of love to me. Is there any way I could make him care? Also, please tell me how to keep men friends. Some say I am too nice to them, but I can't help that. I am the same way with everyone. I think I have been too serious toward him, but what can I do about that now? I haven't seen him for a week. Could he possibly care and act that way?

HURT.

Untrustworthy Suitor.

DEAR HURT: With only a little encouragement from the man, you seem to be deluding yourself completely. His principal interest in you seems to be a mild curiosity to see if he can make a fool of you in an off-hand sort of way. Any statements he has made or may make to the effect that he cares for you should be entirely disregarded, since his actions are so at variance with his words. In matters of the heart particularly, actions speak louder than words. And no girl should be so blindly hungry for romance as to hoodwink herself into believing that a man's intentions toward her are either serious or honorable, when he does no slightest thing to convince her of his full respect or loving concern for her present and future happiness. This man is treating you very shabbily, in a manner so casual as to be downright insulting. I don't believe he has the faintest intention of marrying you, or that he ever will have.

• • • •

No doubt you have been too serious in your attitude toward him, through desiring and anticipating a proposal of marriage and making no secret of that fact. The only way to remedy this error of thought and action is to put him out of your life and mind entirely. Treat him with an indifference to match his own and thereby save your pride and self-respect.

• • • •

It is probable that you are too possessive toward, rather than too nice to your men friends, and for that reason they take to their heels. A man is best held on a very loose rein. The minute they pay you the slightest attention, you might begin to feel and act as if you had some special claim on them, carrying it to the point of throwing yourself in their path, questioning them about their social activities, reproaching them for their civilities to other girls, pouting over their fancied neglect of you, and generally worrying them into a state of weary distaste. Our friends owe us absolutely nothing in the way of friendship, or attention, or gallantry, except what they choose to bestow upon us of their own free will.

• • • •

To be "nice" to people, freely interpreted, usually means to treat them with never failing courtesy, consideration and approving interest, and I am sure that no man has ever yet avoided a woman who thus conducted herself toward him.

M. H.

"Disgusted With Life."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 22 and quite disgusted with life. As time goes on things seem to grow more unbearable, and I hope you can give me some good advice. I left home several years ago, with only a grade school education, to take a job which promised wide travel and contacts with interesting people. I traveled for three years, visited a lot of interesting places, and learned quite a lot that way. All that time my family wanted me to finish my education, but fool that I was, I wasted those years.

• • • •

But regardless of that loss of time, I still want to study and make up for my neglected education. The job I have makes it impossible for me to study during the day, so I am wondering if I could go to school two nights a week, and study the other nights. What would be the proper subjects for me to study? Do you think I am too old to go back to the school room? I know you will think I have been a most senseless girl. Well, I was. But I am willing to do right by myself now. But I am at a loss to know how to start. Please help me out. PERPLEXED.

Not Too Late to Mend.

DEAR PERPLEXED: There is and old saying to the effect that it is never too late to do better, and that applies to persons much, much older than yourself. I should think now would be an excellent time for you to take up your neglected education and gradually work through a high-school course. Now that you are fired by a desire to learn, you will probably master the course much more quickly than you would have if you had reluctantly entered high school years ago, with other plans buzzing through your head.

• • • •

Get in touch with Prof. E. J. Lockwood, director of night classes in the District of Columbia public-school system. His office is at Central High School, Thirteenth and Clifton streets northwest. He can be seen there any day of the week except Sunday, and on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings after 6 o'clock. He and his staff can advise you far better than I as to what subjects to concentrate on. M. H.

Children and Christmas.

DEAR READERS: Time and again you have promptly, generously and effectively responded to some poignant cry of human distress publicized in this column. Your help has taken many forms—seasoned advice, sound suggestion, constructive criticism, sometimes a home or a job or social contacts provided those in desperate straits. Indeed, this proven willingness and ability of yours to help has given rise to a steadily increasing number of letters ending on this note: "I wonder if you or your readers can help me?"

• • • •

And now I am wondering how many readers of this column can and will help The Post's 1936 Toy and Doll Fund by contributing cash donations, large or small, in copper, silver, currency or check. Anything from 5 cents upward will be most gratefully received and will be added to other donations being assembled by other departments of this newspaper.

• • • •

This money will buy shoes, stockings, sweaters, warm gloves and underwear for those underprivileged children—of whom there are more than 20,000 here in the District of Columbia—to whom such necessities of life will seem the most dazzling Christmas luxury.

Those who wish to make their donations through this column may address them to Mary Haworth's Mail, in care of this newspaper, and the contribution will be duly receipted and promptly acknowledged.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

We just cannot get along without nerves. They control our muscles—govern all our movements—and warn us of danger through the sense of pain. But when they become inflamed or unduly sensitive we may individually doubt their value.

The trigeminal nerve is a peculiar affair with three main branches supplying the face. When it becomes unruly it exhibits that fact by torturing its owner—not with an ordinary sort of pain but a shooting, flashing, intense agony like the stab of a hot needle. So sudden may be its appearance that the victim will stop dead in his tracks with the face distorted, the eyes fixed, and the speech paralyzed.

Although the condition has been recognized since the time of the Arabian physician, Avicenna (1000 A. D.), it was not described accurately until Samuel Fothergill reported a number of cases in 1804.

As a rule the seizures are brief and usually follow such simple maneuvers as swallowing, touching the face, brushing the teeth, washing with cold water, or permitting a cold draft to strike the skin. The duration is rarely longer than a few seconds and may cease abruptly. Repeated paroxysms may come on, however, at relatively short intervals, so that the patient may complain for some time of a boring, agonizing distress.

The word "tic" means a spasm and "douloureux," pain—so from its very name we understand that the symptom is not constant. But the few seconds it persists may seem a lifetime to the patient—so incapacitating is its nature.

Of course there are numerous gradations of the affliction. The disturbance may be confined to a tiny filament of the nerve or it may affect one or more main divisions. There is no loss of feeling and the patient is quite normal between attacks. If sensation is lost, this is proof positive that true tic douloureux does not exist.

Numerous remedies have been proposed, such as injecting the nerve with alcohol, or severing one or more branches outside the skull. Either plan may be followed by relief for a while, but the cut nerve will reform and sooner or later the trouble will return.

The only method of treatment which is efficient is the operation perfected by Cushing and Frazier which involves cutting the sensory portion of the structure within the skull. This avoids the undesirable consequences of facial paralysis, although eye symptoms may ensue. The part which controls the muscles is preserved and there is no drooping of the face on the affected side.

There seems to be no drug that will offer permanent aid, although 10 to 15 drops of trichlorethylene vaporized on a handkerchief and inhaled will give temporary relief.

Resort Styles Are 'Feminine' And Feature Vivid Colorings

Heralds of a colorful summer are the new swim suits as shown in the recent Miami Biltmore fashion show. This one above is of slipper satin a new beach fabric. Nassau blue flowers are featured on a white background.

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—It's going to be a gay and giddy summer, at least as far as clothes are concerned. Southern resort collections (always a prophecy of what the stay-at-homes will be wearing a few months later) feature plenty of color, lots of stripes and striking print designs and much lace and frills.

The collections exhibited here in the last few days reveal that the feminine and dress-up influence will continue into summer. Even bathing suits reflect it. Lace ensembles that have been waterproofed are shown for sand and surf wear. Coats and hats for the beach are picturesque and feminine.

Colors Are Bright.

Color was emphasized in the costumes both for day and night. Print designs are large and vivid. Bright pastels also are important. Red looms as a popular color accent for summer. Gray in combination with cherry or scarlet is in vogue for evening wear. Other popular colors for after-dark dresses are jade, Miami gold and Nassau pink.

Slipper satin is a new material for beach wear. It is specially effective in prints of gorgeous design. Flared trunks characterize many of the bathing suits.

The bloomer play suit seems to be threatening the popularity of shorts. These suits appear in colorful prints featuring sea motifs such as alligators, turtles, pirates and mermaids. Even shorts bow to the feminine influence. They are being shown in pleated styles that resemble skirts rather than pants.

Slacks are appearing in black silk alpaca and are worn with simple shirts of silk crepe and wool jersey. Sharkskin is being used for pajama ensembles and tailored play suits.

Spectator Sports-Wear.

Spectator sports clothes are designed to make their wearers appear both pretty and smart. These may take the form of suits, shirtwaist dresses and jacket ensembles of the afternoon type.

The fitted princess silhouette with gored skirts continues dominant and appears in dresses designed for active sports as well as for luncheons, teas and the races. Linen in print designs and in bright pastels fashions many of the daytime dresses.

The evening dress of cotton is shown in some of the collections. Coin dotted pique and fabrics patterned in flowers of the softer shades are used as materials. Net evening gowns are shown in the bright pastels and have very full skirts. Wing sleeves giving the popular flare at the shoulder line appear in many of the evening gowns.

Hollywood Uses Optical Illusions To Reduce Waists

Want an hourglass waist?

There are easier ways of obtaining it than the old-fashioned straitjacket method. One method favored by Hollywood stars is that of optical illusion.

Hollywood designers are trying all sorts of tricks to make waists look small since a battle of the waistlines was started over Marie Wilson's 19-inch measurement.

Orry-Kelly has designed a dress for Olivia de Havilland which carries out the small-waist effect. It is of sheer beige wool made with full-gathered bodice and very full skirt. At the natural waistline is inserted a wide tight belt of self-material. Over it is a crushable brown belt of flexible suede in the same width.

Jane Wyman has a chiffon print dress with an optical waistline reducer. It has a slightly bloused bodice, brief cap sleeves. A narrow belt of self-material encircles the waist and the fullness begins right at the waist making no attempt to slenderize the hips.

The tightly laced cummerbunds as well as the wide laced peasant belt are also being used to simulate the 19-inch waist.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Dec. 15.

A FEW NIGHTS ago I helped cover the first Men's Fashion Show ever held in this country, and it was something! This orgy of he-styles was planned and staged by our local association of custom tailors, who are doing their darnedness to educate our better-dressed fellers into having their duds draped on them instead of merely fitted, and to head off that small army of genuine Beau Brummels who insist on going to London for their raiment.

ALICE HUGHES.

Our men's tailors are the abject slaves of London's Bond street just as for many years our lady designers were chained to the chariot wheels of Paris and the Rue de la Paix. Even now the men get their style quirks from the British capital, where upper-class blokes make an entire career out of dressing "for the occasion." This slavishness even turned up at the show, for its sponsors insisted on a British accent to describe the apparel. So they dug up a retired British major, who told dull and interminable war stories and quite neglected to comment on the stuff either audibly or well.

But I learned that no gent can be considered well turned out unless he has 19 suits in his locker, including six business suits, two each of blue, brown, gray. Nobbiest item was a blue "host's coat" with satin lapels, to be worn with dress trousers.

While all this was parading on the runway, I could hear my spouse, poor wretch, five places away at the speakers' table, muttering sourly, "Yachting suit! Host's coat! Oh, for gosh sake, where's the bar?" I think he found it. But it was an interesting experience and a pleasant change. I just ask a phonograph record of you getting your husbands and boy friends into a host's coat!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Our girls are all agog because the handsome Aldo Nadi, international fencing champion, is here again this winter. He was a sensation as a fencer and a he-beauty last season. Aldo has been teaching Walter "Dodsworth" Huston how to sword-fight for "Othello," in which his handsome wife plays Desdemona—not to mention both Othello and Iago.

Two tricky luxuries for the Christmas trade. A pair of locked perfume bottles. The two lovely rock-crystal scent flasks have a tight-fitting gold plated top with a lock and key—just to remove temptation from the path of maids and such. Then there's the perfume lamp. Its crystal shade is hold a drop or two of your favorite whiff. The heat of the lighted lamp vaporizes the perfume—et voila! Just a thought for those who like nice smells.

Some of our lady press agents could beat "Follies" girls out of their jobs. Real beauts. Kay Vincent, for instance, who specializes in fine shoe publicity, and Eleanor Lambert, who publicizes a half dozen things and people brilliantly. Both blondes. Say, what is this? . . . Speaking of shoes, as we nearly always do, Myron D. Wolf, president of the National Volume Shoe Manufacturers' Association, predicts a sharp increase in the price of shoes after the first of the year, owing to a world-wide shortage of hides, and so on. Just a tip in case you want to stock up on staple footwear before they begin revising the price tags.

Meeting Talloo Bankhead the other day, I recalled that I first saw her when she and Katharine Cornell were in Rachel Crothers' good show, "Nice People"—and that dates me. The star of the piece was Francine Larrimore, now trying her luck in films. Francine is an Adler, one of the great Jewish acting tribe.

Jarnefelts Give Party in New Home

By Dudley Harmon.

A colonial mansion, built by a Boston lawyer, was the scene of a European reception yesterday when the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jarnefelt entertained members of official and residential society between the hours of 5 and 7. It was really a double celebration. Yesterday was the seventy-fifth birthday of the president, Pehr Evind Svinhufvud, and this was the first large party given by the Minister and Mme. Jarnefelt since moving into their new quarters.

The former legation, it will be remembered, was seriously damaged by termites last winter. Now, however, the Minister and Mme. Jarnefelt are established in their new home admirably suited for entertaining.

The house originally belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Grosvenor Backus, New Englanders, who liked Washington so much they decided to reside here. However, they rented their house shortly after moving in and left the Capital.

Simmonses Present.

The guests were surprised yesterday to see at the reception Mr. and Mrs. John Farr Simmons, who were supposed to be in Mexico City on their honeymoon (she is the former Caroline Huston Thompson). It seems that Mr. and Mrs. Simmons found they could make a boat back to New York between strikes, and so decided to embark rather than risk having shipping tied up for an indefinite period. They now are in their new (or literally, old) home in Thirty-fourth street, Georgetown.

Mme. Jarnefelt, who wore a street-length gray gown with a narrow black belt, was assisted during the afternoon by Mme. von Numers, wife of the Secretary of the Legation, who wore a black velvet frock with a bolero jacket.

Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, chatted with some newspaper friends, including Miss Mary Hornaday, president of the Women's National Press Club. The State Department was represented by Mrs. Keith Merrill, in a black coat trimmed with caracul, and a black hat, and by Mrs. Wilbur Carr. Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, whose late husband received the White Rose of Finland decoration for his aid in getting Emma Goldman to Russia after her expulsion from this country, also was present.

Mme. de Laboulaye wore a mink coat over her black gown. Signora Suvich, wife of the Italian Ambassador, also wore black. She wore a black cloth suit trimmed with Persian lamb and a tiny peaked-off-the-face hat.

Others Present.

Mrs. Walter Tuckerman was accompanied by her sister, Countess de Castellane, and by Mrs. Frederick Payne, whose husband was Assistant Secretary of War in the Hoover Administration. Mrs. Payne is spending a week here before returning to her home in Greenfield, Mass.

Other glimpses: The Minister of the Irish Free State, Mr. Michael MacWhite, chatting with Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mrs. Louis Caldwell; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Owsley describing their lovely house to friends (it is like an embassy); Mr. Clarence Hewes, accompanied by Mr. Arthur Bradley Campbell, down from New York for the day; the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik; the Cuban Ambassador, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson, with his daughter, Miss Olga Patterson, in black with a small hat; Mrs. Mondell Gregg, with Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, both in black with strands of pearls; Mrs. John Caswell, wearing gloves exactly matching her antelope hat; the Minister of Latvia, Mr. Alfred Belmanis, and Mrs. Sol Bloom in a black silk gown and cape of silver foxes.

Ropers Plan Family Christmas Dinner

Hessler-Henderson.

Mrs. Richard Fred Roper, pictured with her children, Richard Fred, jr., and Benton Blalock, with Mr. Roper are planning to spend Christmas Day with Secretary and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper. Not only are Christmas plans occupying Mrs. Roper's time, but also preparations for the Children's birthdays, which fall December 29 and January 14.

Mrs. Roosevelt Gives Luncheon For Court Wives

First Lady Also Entertains at Two Teas Later in the Afternoon.

Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at luncheon yesterday at the White House in honor of the wives of the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court. The table was decorated with light pink roses, stevia and maidenhair fern.

The wives of Justices present yesterday included Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis, Mrs. Howard Sutherland, Mrs. Pierce Butler, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts.

Other guests included Mrs. Mahlon Pitney, Judge Fay L. Bentley, Mrs. Frank Bohn, Miss Helen W. Bones, Mrs. Jacob H. Gilbert, Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, Mrs. William A. Julian, Judge Camille Kelley, Miss Katharine F. Lenroot, Mrs. Fairfax S. McCandlish, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Miss Jennie M. Moore, Mrs. Howell Moorhead, Miss Josephine A. Patten, Mrs. Sanford L. Rariden, Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, N. T. Ross, Mrs. Harper Sibley, Mrs. Myron W. Whitney and Mrs. James M. Helm.

Later in the afternoon Mrs. Roosevelt was hostess at two teas, one for prominent women executives and the other for friends who have called at the White House during the season.

Mr. Arthur Bradley Campbell, son of the Marchioness of Huntley, was in Washington yesterday for a brief stay as the guest of Mr. Clarence Hewes. He returned to his home in New York last evening.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

The kaydets at West Point with their "so many days till——" the answer many a poor plebe is having to give quick-like-a-mouse to the upper classmen's queries regarding the length of time until the next holiday have nothing on Mme. Alfaro. Her two sons, Jaime and Colon, jr., will have their first Christmas "leave" this year from the Military Academy and the whole Alfaro household is excited about it. Mme. A. has kept track of the days and hours and rattles them off whenever asked about the homecoming.

Oh, what the fair members of our city have in store for them! Along about March, one of the very handsomest men in the world will pay a visit to these shores. He is Sanad Basta, tall, dark wavy hair, a gentleman of polished speeches, a lover of all sports, a globe trotter—and so on. From what we hear, he is quite the sensation of central Europe and, in fact, he is the inspiration of a book that will soon be in the hands of readers. Speaking of the book—its author, Mrs. Herbert Collins, an attractive American who has a natural flare for dashing clothes and prefers making her home across the Atlantic with occasional visits to her homeland, has been here for a very few days. It was while she was talking to Anis Azer at a recent tea party that we learned of Sanad, who is Anis' cousin.

Margaret Bourke-White was having a struggle with her cameras and lights in her apartment at the Carlton. Assisting her was one of the bell boys. Surprisingly enough he really knew something about arranging lights for picture-talking and made nary a mistake. When all was finished and he turned to go, Miss Bourke-White, delighted at finding someone who did not need coaching in the art, enthusiastically exclaimed:

"You are simply an angel!"

Whereupon the youth smiled sheepishly and said: "thank you, my name's Wallace Angel."

Caroline Miller Burns flew up from Randolph Field, Tex., and with her mother, Mrs. Archibald Miller, will leave today to rejoin her husband and son at the Army Air Corps post. Seems as though every time Caroline arrives in town for no matter how brief a visit, we always run into her just after she has landed here. Saw her yesterday and she was as pretty as ever in a soft woolen frock of cocoa brown with accessories to match, and a brown caracul coat.

A "cocky-tail" party, an altogether doggie function, was given yesterday afternoon by Mary McCracken Jones and Hazel Edgar in honor of Mrs. Jones' wire-hair terrier, Twink, who was celebrating her tenth birthday. Twink was dressed for the occasion in a Stuart plaid harness that Mrs. Jones brought her from Scotland last summer, and was assisted in greeting the guests by her young son, Moby Dick. Moby showed signs of being somewhat disgruntled that the party was not all his, but otherwise things went smoothly except for occasional growls.

Personages of dogdom, all residents of the neighborhood, who were there by special invitation, included Baron, a Great Dane; Duke, who bears a title despite rather humble ancestry; Rex, a police dog; Prince, a Labrador retriever, and Fritz, a Springer spaniel.

Benefit Bazaar Set for Today

An exhibit of special interest in the Near East Refugee Handicrafts Bazaar at the Carlton Hotel tomorrow is a replica of one of the famous bull cups found in a tomb at Vaphio, near Corinth, Greece. The original, which is gold and now in a museum in Athens, dates back to the Miocene period, 500 to 1500 B. C.

Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman is chairman of the committee which is sponsoring the exhibit and sale; Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, Miss Bessie J. Kibbey and Mrs. William H. King are vice chairmen. Among members of the committee are Mrs. Albert W. Abbott, Mrs. Stephen Reid Capps, Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr.

Mrs. Stanwood Cobb, Mrs. James J. Davis, Mrs. Clarence Phelps Dodge, Mrs. Robert C. Dove, Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, Mrs. Robert M. Gates, Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Mrs. William Hurd Hill, Mrs. John B. Larner, Mrs. Albert Joseph McCartney.

Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mrs. H. Hays Mirkil, Miss Janet Richards, Mrs. Harper Sibley, Mrs. William A. Slade, Mrs. George Winchester Stone, Mrs. Harlan Fisker Stone, Mrs. Glen Levin Swiggett, Mrs. William Howard Taft, Miss Mabel B. Turner, Mrs. Herbert L. Willett, jr., and Mrs. Raymond L. Wolven.

Society Notes

The Ambassador of Belgium and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz entertained at dinner last evening at the embassy. On Friday the Countess will fly to Miami, Fla., and will continue from there by airplane to the Argentine to spend several weeks.

The Ambassador of China and Mme. Sze entertained on Monday evening at a dinner party at the embassy on Nineteenth street. The ranking guests were the Ambassador of Italy and Signora Suvich.

Other guests included the Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close, the Canadian Minister and Lady Marler, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Ernest G. Draper, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Lochhead, Mrs. Margot Holmes, Mrs. Edward Miller-Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Carlos Del Mar, Mr. and Mrs. E. Percival Wilson and Dr. and Mrs. Davenport White.

Senator and Mrs. Warren R. Austin, of Vermont, are passing a day or two in Washington at the Mayflower before leaving for Miami, where they will spend Christmas. Senator Austin will address the Coral Gables Club on Saturday.

The Speaker of the House, Mr. William B. Bankhead, has arrived in Washington, accompanied by Mrs. Bankhead, and is in residence at the Mayflower where they have engaged an apartment for the Congressional season.

Mr. and Mrs. Newbold Noyes are expected to return today or tomorrow from New York, where Mr. Noyes recently arrived from Europe after a visit in London and Cannes with Mrs. Noyes' cousin, Mrs. Ernest Simpson.

Cocktail and Dinner Parties Crowd Winter Social Schedule

Many Hostesses in Capital Are Sending out Their Invitations Weeks Ahead of Time; Mrs. Rogers Plans Function on Inaugural Evening.

So hectic and crowded is this winter's social schedule that Washington's hostesses are getting out their invitations weeks ahead of time. Indicative of the frenzy of cocktail and dinner engagements scheduled in the next month is the fact that one hostess, Mrs. Higginson Rogers, has already issued invitations for a dinner to take place January 20, inauguration evening.

Mrs. Cary Langhorne is entertaining at a dinner this evening at the 1925 F Street Club, and earlier in the day Mrs. Mondell Gregg will give a cocktail party at her home in Georgetown. On Friday Mr. and Mrs. Kurt Hetzel will entertain their friends at a cocktail party at the F Street Club, and on Sunday Mrs. Francis Whitten will entertain at a similar affair at her home on Thompson circle.

Mr. Seldon Chapin of the State Department and Mrs. Chapin have issued invitations for a tea on Wednesday, December 23, in honor of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Winchester Noyes, of New York. Mme. van Kaathoven is among the many members of society who will entertain at dinner parties on Christmas night, and that evening the second of the three dances scheduled at the 1925 F Street Club will take place. The first was held on Thanksgiving night. Another cocktail party in the near future is that at which Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pell will entertain on Tuesday afternoon, December 22.

The former Ambassador to Italy and Mrs. Breckinridge Long are entertaining at a dance on Friday evening at Grasslands. On Monday evening they were guests of honor at a dinner given by Mrs. Walter Denegre at her home at 1315 Sixteenth street.

The Ambassador of Italy and Signora Suvich, accompanied by the Naval Attache and the Marchioness of Sant' Orsola, will go to Annapolis today, where a parade will be given in their honor. Following this, they will be the guests in whose honor the Superintendent of the Academy and Mrs. David Foote Sellers will entertain at luncheon in their quarters.

Suvichs Lunch Guests Of Women's Press Club

The Ambassador of Italy, Signor Fulvio Suvich, and Signora Suvich, yesterday were guests of honor at the luncheon in the Women's National Press Club at the Willard. The Ambassador gave a cautiously worded address.

Signora Suvich, who wore a gray suit with a lavender scarf at the neck, and a small gray hat trimmed in Persian lamb, also spoke briefly, expressing her pleasure at being there.

Another guest at the speaker's table was Count Fumasoni Biondi.

Mrs. Andrew B. Young, of Philadelphia, with her son, has arrived to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Swagar Sherley. Mr. Young will arrive for Christmas.

Recipes in Cake Contest Show Housewives Busy

CAKES GALORE! By the turnout of the cake recipes in our contest last week it looks as if our housewives have been busy getting ready for Christmas and families won't go hungry for sweets. We will have to do lots of visiting, too, to sample all of the varieties, for there were few duplicates in the recipes.

The first prize, $3, was won by Mrs. E. Nussbaum, 1210 Perry street northeast, for her recipe for Snow Basket.

The second prize of $2 was won by Dorothy Cuff, 1331 Maryland avenue northeast, for her recipe for Peppermint Candy Layer Cake. The third prize, $1, went to Katharine B. Smith, of the Laclede apartments, for her recipe for Uncooked Fruit Cake. The fourth prize, $1, went to Mrs. Lydia Allen Smith, 302 Amherst street, Winchester, Va., and the fifth prize, also $1, was awarded to Mrs. Wilbur Heefner, Mont Alto, Pa.

Here is Mrs. Nussbaum's recipe:

A Snow Basket.

Bake a rather large, round sponge cake. Cut out the center, leaving the sides 1½ inches thick. Cover with white icing while it is soft, sprinkle thickly with grated cocoanut. Soften a strip of angelica one inch wide in hot water; bend and insert for a handle. Fill basket with frozen sherry parfait and decorate top and edge with snowberries and tiny poinsettias cut from candied cherries, citron and angelica. Place the basket on lace paper doily on a glass or mirror plate and surround with small sprigs of holly and mistletoe.

Frozen Sherry Parfait.

1 tablespoon granulated gelatin
¼ cup cold water
¾ cup sugar
1 pint cream
1 cup sherry
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Dissolve gelatin in cold water, then over hot, mix with sugar, lemon juice and sherry. When sugar has dissolved, fold in stiffly whipped cream and freeze in refrigerator tray.

Dorothy Cuff's recipe:

Peppermint Candy Layer Cake.

1-3 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 teaspoons baking powder
2-3 cup sour milk
¼ teaspoon soda
1¾ cups cake flour
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup finely crushed peppermint candy

Cream the butter and sugar. Beat the egg yolks separately. Add the yolks to the butter and sugar, after they are creamed. Add sour milk in which soda has been dissolved, alternately with the cake flour, which has been sifted with baking powder and salt. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Sprinkle ½ cup crushed peppermint candy over all. Bake in two 7-inch layer cake pans at 375 F.

Boiled Frosting.

2 whites of eggs
2 cups sugar
¼ cup boiling water

Add the sugar to whites, 2 drops of oil of peppermint and 1 cup crushed red-striped peppermint candy.

Katharine Smith's recipe follows:

Uncooked Fruit Cake.

1½ pounds seeded raisins
½ pound dried currants
¾ pound dates
½ pound figs
½ pound candied cherries
½ pound crystallized pineapple
¼ pound citron
¾ pound shelled pecans
2 cups oatmeal
1½ cups wheat biscuit
1 cup each of grape juice and thick blackberry juice
¾ cup strained honey
4 tablespoons olive oil
½ teaspoon nutmeg
4 whole cloves
2 allspice berries
2 inches stick cinnamon

Combine the fruit juices and spices and simmer them over a slow fire until the juices are well flavored with the spices. Then strain through a cheesecloth. Put the oatmeal and wheat bsicuit through a meat chopper before measuring, then add to the boiling fruit juices. Cover closely and set it away overnight. Cut the fruit and bread the nuts as for the usual fruit cake. The currants will need thorough washing and must dry overnight. If one prefers they may be left out and the same amount of some other fruit used, instead, but the flavor of the currants will repay one for the extra work of cleaning them. Stir the honey and olive oil into the cereals and fruit juice. Combine the nuts and fruits and work them into this, using the hands. The mixing must be done in a large pan so as to blend everything thoroughly. Line a cake pan with heavy waxed paper, brushed over with olive oil. Pack the combined mixture in this, a little at a time, pressing it down until it is perfectly solid. Decorate the top with nuts and cherries. Put the cake in a covered bread tin and set it in a cool place for several weeks or longer. Several days before cutting it, wrap it in a cloth wet with either wine or grape juice.

Mrs. Smith's recipe:

Christmas Tree Cake.

3 cups flour
1½ cups sugar
¾ cup butter
¾ cup milk
4 teaspoons baking powder
3 egg yolks
3 whole eggs
1 teaspoon extract

Cream butter and sugar. Add eggs which have been well beaten. Sift flour and baking powder together and sift again and add alternately with milk to first mixture. Add extract and beat well. Divide into three portions. To one portion add red coloring and to other add 1 square of melted chocolate and 2 tablespoons of milk. Put alternating spoonfuls of cake mixture into a well-greased sheet pan measuring 10 by 15 inches. Bake 25 to 30 minutes in a moderate oven at 350 degrees. When done remove from pan and let cool. Cut cake in five circles that are 6, 5, 4, 3 and 2 inches in diameter. Use the largest circle for the bottom layer and the smallest for the top. This forms a pyramid. Put together with thick strawberry jam between circles. Since each circle is smaller than the one below, do not let jam cover entire lower layer of cake. Cover whole cake with green frosting.

Frosting.

1 egg white
2 tablespoons of lemon juice
¼ cup butter
¼ teaspoon bitter almond extract
Confectioners sugar
Green coloring

Add confectioners sugar in sufficient quantity to the other ingredients to make the right consistency to spread. Color green. Cover the cake with green frosting and sprinkle with finely shredded cocoanut colored green to give the appearance of a Christmas tree. Remove brown skins from Brazil nuts, cut in strips and insert in frosting and decorate between Brazil nuts with tiny candies in different color. Before serving the cake light the Brazil nuts using a taper. Nuts will burn nicely and are better than candles because there is no grease to run down into the cake frosting.

Mrs. Heefner's recipe follows:

Apricot Cake.

1 cup sugar
¼ cup butter
1 egg
1 teaspoon each of cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg
2¼ cups flour
1¾ teaspoon soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup apricot pulp
½ cup apricot juice
1 cup chopped nuts
1 cup raisins

Put the apricots and the raisins through a food chopper. Cream butter and sugar. Add egg and beat. Sift dry ingredients. Add the apricots, pulp and juice to the cake alternately with the flour mixture. Add nuts and raisins and mix through the cake. Bake in loaf pan lined with oiled paper. Bake 350 F. for 40 minutes. Let cake rise in pan 15 minutes before baking.

Parents Urged To Vary Routine Of Young Child

Expert Warns That Babies Always Are Creatures of Habit.

BABIES are creatures of habit. They like their own familiar surroundings and routine, but too much insistence on habit may be a mistake. Habit is not and should not be looked upon as an end in itself.

It is a good plan to accustom a child from the outset to occasional variations of routine, to entire change of environment, as, for example, on a visit. But too many such breaks are no less a mistake, and frequently upset the baby.

Crowds and noise are never good for babies. The mother who for any reason prefers gadding about to staying at home, and takes her baby with her on her travels, may have to face the problem of jaded nerves and an uncertain digestion in her child. Of course, there are children who are always on the road and seem to suffer no ill effects from their nomadic life.

Our forebears brought up children under the most uncertain and variable conditions. The Indians and Arabs and most primitive shepherd folk seldom stay in one place long. But necessity is a hard taskmaster and rarely considers the welfare of the individual.

How many babies die under such conditions, no one stops to think. The survivors are probably, however, a small proportion of the births.

When one watches parents bringing home tired, fretful babies after a week-end visit, one wonders whether the holiday can be worth while even for the parents. The babies certainly suffer from it, and may not fully recover before it is time to start off again. Babies and toddlers need peace and quiet to grow, and parents must often sacrifice a few years of fun if they are to bring up healthy children.

Wreath Tree Substitute.

An excellent substitute for a Christmas tree, and one which will provide all the holiday atmosphere and be more dignified in appearance, is a huge wreath. Some wreaths are made eight feet in diameter, and are truly works of art, combining magnolia leaves, various evergreens, dried palm leaves, holly, and other materials.

Post Food Contest Featuring Dishes Made of Oranges

You all enjoy oranges for breakfast, sliced or in juice form, and you like the fresh flavor of oranges in a fruit cup before or after a meal, but do you take advantage of their luscious flavor in other ways?

There are any number of excellent recipes using oranges as puddings, baked, to serve with a meat course, in frozen desserts and in cakes and cookies. Have you one of these unusual recipes that you think deserves a prize? If you have, type or write it clearly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post Food Editor, so she will receive it not later than Saturday morning. You may be one of the lucky five to win a cash award.

The prizes for this contest are $3 for first prize, $2 for the second prize and $1 for each of the additional three prizes.

Be sure to write your name and address clearly on each recipe submitted.

Albertinis Honor Dominican Envoy

The Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza were the guests in whose honor Dr. and Mrs. Oscar D. Albertini entertained at dinner last night at the Shoreham.

Dr. and Mrs. Albertini and their niece, Miss Margarita Montero, expect to leave tomorrow to pass the Christmas season at their home in Havana and will return shortly after the first of the year. Miss Montero will join her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Montero, in Havana.

Others in last evening's party were the former United States Ambassador to Chile and Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Mr. and Mrs. John Elmer McClure, Miss Mercedes Guerra, Miss Montero and her brother, Mr. Antonio Montero, jr., and Mr. Sebastian Valverde.

North Carolina Party For Christmas Tonight

The receiving line will form at 8:30, headed by Mr. Giles Yeomans Newton, president. Arrangements have been made for cards in the supper clubroom, where Mrs. R. D. W. Connor will be hostess, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Thad Page, Mr. John Wilbur Jenkins and Miss Augusta Landis.

Mr. Ellis Gives Program Before Ohio Society

Mr. Wade H. Ellis, former attorney general of Ohio and assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, Monday night presented a program of "Lyrics and Limericks" at the meeting of the Ohio State Society in the Shoreham ballroom.

Mr. Ellis for years has written Limericks as a hobby and frequently used to exchange them with the late President Wilson, who was also fond of composing them. In addition to his part of the program Monday night, there were songs by Mr. Charles Wilfred Smith, Welsh-American tenor. Dancing and a buffet supper followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis had as their guests at the supper former Senator and Mrs. Howard Southerland, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Bohn, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mandeville, Mr. and Mrs. Green H. Hackworth, Mrs. William Biddle and Mrs. Ferrington, dean of Chevy Chase School for Girls.

Editor to Give Talk At Fourth of Series.

Mr. Walter E. Myer, the well-known editor, will speak on "Problems of American International Policy" on Saturday night at Wardman Park Hotel, when Miss Pauline de Brodes will have the fourth in her series of soirees. Mr. Myer's talk will be followed by an informal entertainment and dancing.

Miss de Brodes, who is director of French at Penn Hall College, spends week-ends in Washington. Saturday night she will be assisted by Mrs. W. A. Carr, Miss Winifred de Voe and Mrs. T. A. Groover.

Mrs. Hughes Plans Tea for Miss McAfee

Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes will entertain at a tea on Wednesday afternoon, December 30, in honor of Miss Mildred Helen McAfee, the new president of Wellesley College.

Members of the Wellesley Clubs of Washington and Baltimore, prospective Wellesley students and heads of girls' schools in and near the Capital will be among the guests.

Daughter to Johnstons.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Murray Johnston, of Brookline, Mass., announce the birth of a son, William Murray Johnston, on December 11 at the New England Baptist Hospital, Boston. Mrs. Johnston is the former Mildred Williamson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ezra E. Williamson, of Washington and of Kings Point, Great Neck, Long Island.

Versailles Pact 'Evils' Assailed By Ribbentrop

Germany Will Scrap Unjust Clauses, He Says; Demands Colonies.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 15.—Joachim von Ribbentrop, Germany's new Ambassador to London, declared Germany was determined to scrap "the discriminating part of the Versailles Treaty" in a speech tonight emphasizing Germany's need for colonial possessions.

"One thing is certain," he said, "and this I cannot help stating:

"Germany has made up her mind to get rid of that discriminating part of the Versailles Treaty which no great nation could have tolerated forever.

"To obtain this aim by agreement, Der Fuehrer and Chancellor made his offer to the world, but the world, still blind and wrapped up in the mentality which is generally known today as 'the spirit of Versailles,' did not respond."

Lord Londonderry, member of the British House of Lords, followed Von Ribbentrop with a suggestion world leaders meet to determine a program of peace.

He suggested as the first conferees Chancellor Hitler, Premier Mussolini, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, and Premier Leon Blum. Russia was omitted, he said, because the Soviet Union sought to undermine institutions which many nations believed "kept their country stable."

Farmers Bar New Religion.

Berlin, Dec. 15 (AP).—To farmers of the little state of Oldenburg belongs much of the credit for Chancellor Hitler's order to drop anti-Christian propaganda, officials indicated today.

When Karl Roever, Nazi provincial leader at Oldenburg, called a mass meeting of farmers some days ago to impress upon them the necessity of raising more foodstuffs in line with the "new religion" based on pure Germanic ancestry and love of the soil, he was hooted down.

"Restore the cross—put the crucifix back in place," the farmers cried.

This incident, coupled with warnings from other rural districts that farmers disapproved of anti-Christian preachings, was said to have impressed Hitler so that he ordered ardent proponents of the new religion to desist.

Motorman Exonerated In Chicago 'El' Crash

Chicago, Dec. 15 (AP).—A coroner's jury decided tonight 11 persons killed in the city's most disastrous elevated lines smash-up came to their deaths "as the result of an accident."

The verdict freed from technical custody Van R. Grooms, 36-year-old motorman of the North Shore Lines train which plowed into the wooden rear coach of an Evanston express, November 24. More than 60 passengers were injured.

Airliner, Seven On Board, Long Missing on Hop

Salt Lake City at dawn, was forced back by clouds blocking visibility. Shortly after noon another rescue plane departed.

At some small-town airport in the picturesque region—desert broken in sections by wild and forbidding mountains—searchers hoped to find the passengers and crew awaiting rescue.

Besides Pilot Samson and the petite 26-year-old stewardess, the plane, which left Los Angeles at 11:15 p. m., Pacific time, last night, carried:

Mr. and Mrs. John Wolfe, of Chicago; H. W. Edwards, who bought a ticket for Salt Lake City, and C. Christopher, of Dwight, Ill., passengers, and Co-pilot William Bozen.

The attentions of two handsome sky-minded men put Miss Witt into the headlines last month.

She apparently couldn't make up her mind between Erick K. Balzer, steamship executive, and Pilot James A. Roe, at Kansas City.

Leaving Balzer literally "waiting at the church" in Glendale, Calif., Miss Witt flew to Kansas City to meet Roe. Balzer gave flying chase as Roe came from an eastern tour of duty. She resigned as chief stewardess of Western Air.

The primate said an insurgent victory was "certain," but that "foreign aid and especially that of Russia makes the war longer and bloodier."

Later, she said Roe hadn't proposed, but admitted she wanted "to talk it over with Jimmy." Asked if she hoped Roe would propose, she said: "Oh, I think that would be very nice."

Then, the affair an object of national interest, she left Kansas City after talking with both Roe and Balzer, and went west to "think things over."

Upshot of the romantic mix-up: Miss Witt remained single, returned to Salt Lake City, was rehired as a stewardess.

Judge Appointed.

'Mustn't Chisel,' U. S. Workers Told

Acting Comptroller General R. N. Elliott cracked down yesterday on those employes of the General Accounting Office who knocked off work before 4:30 p. m. to make personal "repairs."

Apparently determined to see that Uncle Sam gets everything coming to him—a policy he has always followed in his decisions—Elliott sent this warning to all department heads:

"It is quite apparent that many employes of the General Accounting Office are not giving full seven hours time a day. Every day a considerable number stop work by or before 4:15 and repair to the washroom and do no work thereafter.

"The law requires seven hours of duty from employes and those who are not willing to comply therewith will be expected to hand in their resignations."

All supervisory officials, Elliott further decreed, "are expected to be at their desks by 9 a. m. and will be held responsible for having all their employes render the service required by law."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Howard University School of Music presents Conrad Bernier in an organ recital in Rankin Memorial Chapel Tuesday night. Program: Voluntary (Purcell), Ricercare (Palestrina), Noel and Variations (Daquin), Allegro from Concerto No. 4 (Handel), Passacaglia and Fugue (Bach), Sketch in F minor (Schumann), Chorale in B minor (Franck), Variations from Symphony No. 5 (Widor), Finale from Symphony No. 1 (Vierne).

That the personality of a performer can be projected through so complicated a mechanism as the organ remains one of the minor mysteries of music. There are, of course, organists who play nothing but notes. Fortunately, Conrad Bernier belongs to the fold of organists for whom the organ is, as it were, a natural voice to be used with distictive eloquence. For that reason, his conversation with composers last evening was continuously enjoyable.

When placed as neighbors on a program, Purcell and Handel almost spring apart with an antipathetic recoil. Purcell is so thoroughly British as to be a musical prototype of the cartoonist's John Bull, and Handel, trailing his clouds of Saxon and Italian influences, is a cosmopolite who could not become completely naturalized. The contrast was particularly striking between Purcell's sturdy and spontaneous Voluntary and the conscious formalism of the Handel Concerto.

Other interesting divergencies in the first half of the program were manifest in the vocal type of writing in Palestrina's "Ricercare," the Gothic traceries in the Daquin variations, and the polyphonic mastery in Bach's Passacaglia and Fuge.

Schumann's instrument was so definitely the piano that his F minor sketch for organ sounds like speech with a foreign accent. On the other hand, Franck's B minor chorale could not be transcribed for the piano without losing its essential character.

Mr. Bernier's technical skill came to the fore admirably in the difficult Widor variations on a Schumann-like theme, which he handled with deftness of fingers and tact in registration.

Harry W. Smith, Native Here, Dead

Harry Washington Smith, 73, of 214 Tenth street northeast, lifelong resident of the District and for nearly half a century employed in the Navy Department, died yesterday in Providence Hospital.

Smith, who was born and lived all his life in Washington, was retired three years ago from the Navy Department, where he was employed for 48 years. For many years before his retirement, he was chief clerk of the Bureau of Naval Intelligence.

Long active in Masonic affairs he was past master of Pentalpha Lodge of Masons, of which lodge he was a member for 50 years. He was also a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Royal Order of Scotland.

Mr. Smith is survived by a sister, Mrs. C. C. Rogers, Chevy Chase, Md., and a nephew, W. A. Rogers, 2d. His wife, Mrs. Eva Marvin Smith, died a year ago.

According to tentative funeral arrangements, services will be held from the Lee funeral home Thursday with Masonic rites.

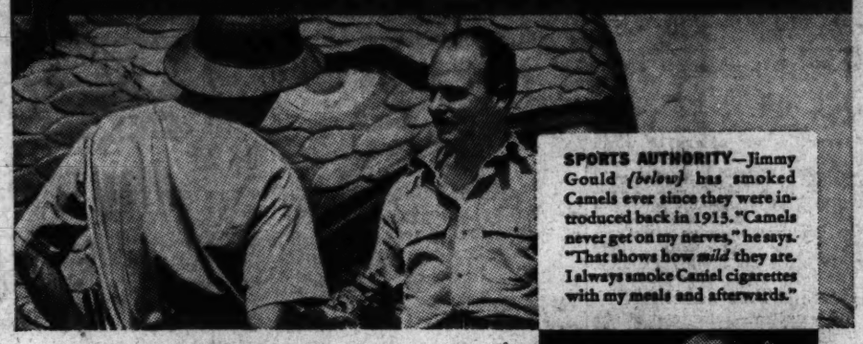
SAYS LAWRENCE GRISWOLD



SPORTS AUTHORITY—Jimmy Gould (below) has smoked Camels ever since they were introduced back in 1915. "Camels never get on my nerves," he says. "That shows how mild they are. I always smoke Camel cigarettes with my meals and afterwards."

The Federal Diary

By Samuel Lubell.

Dismissals.

Representatives of four A. F. G. E. lodges affected by the current reductions in governmental agencies have united behind a three-point program which they intend pushing jointly.

The program calls for, first, extension of civil service through qualifying examinations to employes in affected agencies to give such dismissed workers civil service status that will entitle them to first crack at available jobs.

Point two is the creation of WPA projects for dismissed workers, and point three, that hiring of non-civil service employes be made mandatory from the replacement register.

Lodges represented thus far are WPA, Resettlement, Agriculture, No. 31, and AAA, No. 116. The program is also to be presented to the lodges in Labor and Interior, some of whose members are affected.

A committee has been appointed to take up the civil service request with the commission and points two and three with WPA Administration Harry L. Hopkins; also to confer with national headquarters of the A. F. G. E. Committee members are Arthur Stein, Jackie Leeder and Henry Rhine, of WPA; Dan Kessler, of AAA, No. 116; James Radabaugh and Ed Warren, of Agriculture, No. 31, and I. J. Komroff and Elizabeth Hale, of Resettlement.

That efficiency ratings were the chief factor considered in the AAA furloughs yesterday is indicated from the fact that John E. Dwyer, whose "red" allegations at the Detroit A. F. G. E. convention angered Secretary Wallace, was not dismissed. Dwyer was warned several weeks ago to confine his union activities to after working hours and probably would have been axed if it wasn't for his efficiency.

Labor Mediator.

J. Warren Madden's decision to defend the constitutionality of the national labor relations act personally before the Supreme Court did not surprise NLRB employes who long ago learned to appreciate the quiet forcefulness of the board chairman . . . Madden had scarcely gotten the Pittsburgh soot out of his hair after his appointment when he braved the lion in the lion's den by firmly upholding labor's right to organize in an address before the National Manufacturers Association, arch-opponents of the Wagner labor relations act . . .

The lights burn long in Madden's office for the 48-year-old chairman is a prodigious worker . . . also he enjoys the quiet of his office after working hours . . . A former law professor at Oklahoma, Ohio, West Virginia, Stanford, Chicago and Cornell universities Madden has retained the mild, diffident appearance of the scholar . . . At board hearings, his brow seems always knitted, accentuating the slight traces of gray around his temples . . . Quite frequently he will break in on the witness with a humorous side remark, punctuated by a warm smile . . .

Madden's labor experience was as a mediator in the street railway strike in Pittsburgh and as a member of Gov. Pinchot's committee investigating the private police guards employed by steel plant and coal mine operators . . . Also of undoubted assistance in his mediation work has been a long study of domestic relations . . . he has written two books on the subject . . . Himself a strong family man, he has two girls and three boys . . . When they get together, the children form a family band, piano, violin, cello, oboe and clarinet . . . Madden doesn't play, but he is a good listener . . .

WPA project control efficiency ratings will be made public in a week to ten days, we have been assured.

Christmas Fund.

Just how it came about we still don't know, but the conductor of the Federal Diary (Sam Lubell to you) will play Santa Claus at all the Christmas parties arranged by the different Federal employe groups for the benefit of The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund.

A Santa Claus outfit is being tailored for us now—being so busy, we've arranged to have a barrel serve as the tailor's dummy—and our dress rehearsal appearance will be at the Social Security Board Union's party tomorrow night at the Palisades Field House. Friday, we'll stage two performances, at the Agriculture Lodge, No. 31, dance in the Hayloft and at the SEC Union's open meeting; while the worst night of all will be Saturday when we make three appearances—the Agriculture ARA dance in the Patio, the R. R. Retirement Board party in the board cafeteria and Labor Lodge, No. 12, dance at the Hayloft.

If on Sunday you should see a short, barrel-looking fellow in a Santa Claus outfit standing before a fake chimney and ringing a bell—call a St. Elizabeths Hospital ambulance for it probably will be your diaryist "quietly gone mad" in the ordeal of toy-collecting.

Postals.

'Heirs of Jacob Baker' Association Accused in Fraud Case.

After a 30-year investigation, postal authorities yesterday took action against what was described as a gigantic mail fraud racket—known as the "Jacob Baker Heirs Association"—with Federal indictments against 28 persons, including an elderly Washington man.

Asserting the alleged scheme was based on an "imaginary estate" left by Jacob Baker, of Revolutionary War days, investigators said millions of dollars had been collected from more than 3,000 victims in various sections of the country and Canada.

Flourishing for many years, the reputed swindle scheme was operated through numerous "Baker Heirs" associations, postal inspectors declared.

Smith, postal authorities said, headed a group of 13 persons. The indictments listed three groups, with headquarters in Johnstown, Altoona and Pittsburgh, and representatives in numerous states.

Unable to Answer Phone.

Called at his hotel last night, Smith was unable to come to the telephone. The call was switched to a woman described as his sister. She said her brother suffered a stroke several months ago and was bedridden. Asked to comment on the indictment, the woman said:

"I don't presume to know my brother's affairs."

Asked if her brother used the full name of William Morrow Cameron Smith, she said she had "heard that name." He is registered at the hotel as "Cameron Smith."

According to Postal Inspector Alfred T. Hawksworth, of Philadelphia, and Special Assistant Attorney General Thomas W. Lanigan, of Washington, the "imaginary estate" was represented by promoters as worth between $1,800,000,000 and $3,000,000,000.

Found 200 Jacob Bakers.

Lanigan said in a 5-year investigation of the many associations organized to collect the estate, the Government had found 200 Jacob Bakers in Pennsylvania and all of their estates had been settled.

The first Jacob Bakers, he said, came to Pennsylvania in the early seventeenth century, one family from Germany and another from England.

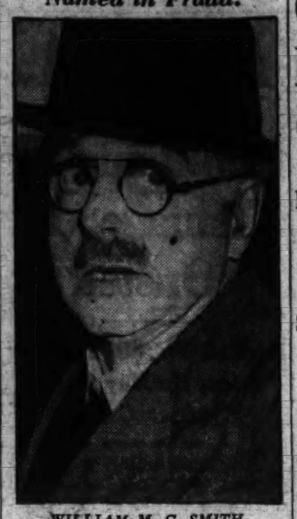
"For 70 years, promoters in Canada and the United States have been exploiting the purported Jack Baker estate," Lanigan said.

Indictments charged defendants with conspiring to "obtain money and property from said victims by means of false and fraudulent representations."

First Postoffice fraud orders were issued against a Detroit association in 1904, investigators said. This group had collected approximately $750,000.

Among those indicted was a mother of 16 children in Portland, Oreg., and two housewives in Pittsburgh. The majority were Pennsylvania residents.

Named in Fraud.



WILLIAM M. C. SMITH.

K. of C. Hears Reds Assailed By Dr. Walsh

Educator of Georgetown Tells of Communism's Threat to Church.

Warning his hearers that communism is a definite meance to the United States, Dr. Edmund A Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, last night asked a general assembly of five local Knights of Columbus councils to follow the lead of the Catholic Church in fighting the advance of atheistic communism in this country.

Speaking at the Knights of Columbus Hall, Dr. Walsh pointed out that communism is not "merely an economic weapon for the removal of social injustice," but "a heresy which denies and attacks the very cornerstone of the Catholic religion—belief in the existence of God."

Were communism an attempt to do away with social and economic injustice, Dr. Walsh declared that the Catholic Church "would be unequivocally on its side in the present world crisis."

The Georgetown educator specifically warned the knights against believing that there is no Communist problem in the United States. "This has been stated by certain Catholic professors who should know better," he said. Citing the Godless beliefs of communism, Dr. Walsh declared:

"Such atheism, with its concomitant attack on revealed religion and Catholic morality in particular, is inseparable from the economic demands of the Communist Party of the United States. No temporary or transparent ruse, such as a 'unitde front,' should deceive informed Catholics."

Behind the Communist Party of the United States, Dr. Walsh warned, stands a powerful foreign government dedicated to the "destruction of Christianity" and the "abolition of the democratic form of government" guaranteed to American citizens by their Constitution.

Julian Cromelin, grand knight of Washington Council, presided at the meeting. It was called in response to the appeal of Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of the Archdiocese of Baltimore, that Catholic laymen join forces with their church in resisting communistic tendencies.

Civic Club Battles Abattoir Proposal

The Southeast Council of Citizens Associations last night opposed a petition of the Lincoln Park Citizens Association, a neighboring body, for an abattoir at Benning and adopted a resolution asking that Eleventh street southeast be made a two-way street.

The group voted, 17 to 2, in opposition to the abattoir.

Several months ago the Lincoln Park group gained the displeasure of the council by bringing about a one-way traffic regulation on Eleventh street, main out-of-town artery of the section.

The changes made Eleventh street one-way from B street northeast to North Carolina avenue southeast, thus affecting territory claimed by the Southeast council.

The council also adopted a resolution in opposition to the one-way street and asked immediate return to the orthodox system of traffic.

Campaign to Extend Merit System Forecast

A vigorous campaign to extend and strengthen the merit system was forecast yesterday at a joint meeting here of the executive council of the National Federation of Federal Employes and representatives of the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations.

"Action in behalf of the merit system is long overdue and the Nation is looking to this Congress for public-spirited action which will lift the Federal service out of the realm of partisan politics," the groups declared in a statement issued after the meeting. "That action must be taken immediately to restore public confidence in the public service, and to place it on a proper plane in our national life."

City Honors Former Deed Office Heads

Portraits of 12 Recorders Unveiled in Labor Auditorium.

Senator Thomas Pledges Support in Drive for Building.

Portraits of 12 past recorders of deeds of the District of Columbia, ten of them colored men, were unveiled last night before a large assembly of distinguished residents in the Labor Department auditorium.

Presentation of the portraits was made by Russell C. Parr, director of the Federal art project for the District, under whose supervision the likenesses were painted.

As each picture was unveiled, Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of public schools, acting as master of ceremonies, introduced a speaker who gave a brief outline of the subject's achievements.

First of the distinguished men who have held the office to have his portrait unveiled and to be lauded was Simeon Wolf.

Life Outlined.

An outline of his life was given by Maurice D. Rosenberg, an attorney who was associated with Wolf. A glowing picture, as skillfully done as the likeness, was painted by Rosenberg of his old friend.

Rosenberg told of the kindness and broad outlook Wolf maintained as long as he lived. He was educated in the public schools, Rosenberg said, later becoming a well-known attorney. He was appointed to the office by President Harrison.

Another portrait unveiled was one of Frederick Douglass, of Maryland, famous for his emancipation fight for his race. His life was sketched by Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, a member of the school board and an intimate of Douglass while he lived.

Making Money.

Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, speaker of the occasion, lauded the work of Douglass, his foresight and fortitude for trying to gain what at the time was thought to be a hopeless cause.

Praise also was heaped on the shoulders of Dr. William J. Thompkins, incumbent recorder of deeds, by Senator Thomas.

"Under Dr. Thompkins' supervision," he said, "the office has balanced its budget and is actually making money. New devices have been installed and ancient plats and records are being copied."

Senator Thomas promised his support as chairman of the Senate sub-committee for a building program that would include a new and fireproof structure to house the recorder of deeds office.

Other portraits unveiled included John F. Costello, James C. Matthews, J. M. Trotter, Blanche K. Bruce, Charles H. J. Taylor, Henry P. Cheatham, John C. Dancy, Henry Lincoln Johnson and Arthur G. Froe.

Choral selections and piano music were furnished by the Howard University Glee Club, Todd Duncan, member of the Porgy and Bess cast, sang two solos, "Four Winds" and "Morning Hymn."

Laundry Assumes Security Payments

The Social Security program will not cause any pay envelope deductions from workers of the Pioneer Laundry during 1937, it was learned yesterday.

The firm, in addition to giving the usual Christmas bonus, will assume employes' payments for social security pensions during the coming year, M. G. Long, jr., secretary and treasurer, told employes at a dinner at the Hamilton Hotel.

Similar announcements were made to colored employes at their banquet.

3 Clerics Talk On Tolerance At Symposium

Protestant, Rabbi, Priest Agree It Exists, But Disagree on Growth.

Three clergymen—a Protestant minister, a Jewish rabbi and a Catholic priest—established in a discussion last night that tolerance exists between religious faiths but disagreed over whether that tolerance was at present decreasing or increasing.

The clergymen—the Rev. Dr. A. W. Gottschall, pastor of the First Christian Church at Baltimore; Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, member of the executive committee of the National Conference of Jews and Christians, and the Rev. Michael J. Ahern, S. J., professor of geology at Weston College, Boston, Mass.—were discussing the question of religious training for children at an informal symposium at Langley Junior High School. The symposium was sponsored by local civic and religious groups.

Father Ahern, considering the first question posed by Chairman Edward C. Higbie, president of Wilson Teachers College, declared that intolerance was not a matter of convictions but was a human quality. He said he was convinced that most people were tolerant, explaining the seeming extent of intolerance with the statement that one such act looms larger than 100 tolerant acts.

Rabbi Lazaron said that there was a strong possibility intolerance was growing in extent. The only way to maintain religious differences without giving rise to prejudice was, he said, to act with modesty and humility.

Gottschall Cites Tests.

In answer to the question: "Is it possible to give children religious training in their own beliefs and still keep them intolerant?" Dr. Gottschall said tests had shown that it was definitely possible. Experiments in teaching children not only their own beliefs but the meaning of other faiths had shown themselves to be eminently successful, he said.

Rabbi Lazaron replied that the public schools were the best agent for tolerance. Prejudice arose, he said, when members of one race generalized on the qualities of another after having encountered one uncharacteristic specimen. Such prejudices mentioned in the home led to the intolerance in children, he argued.

Recalls Children's Questions.

Dr. Gottschall was asked how best to answer a child's question, "Who is God?" He replied that in his experience children first asked the question, "Where is God?" having, he said, an instinctive knowledge God exists. He told his children, he recalled, "God is where love is," considering this to be an explanation that the little ones could readily understand.

Rabbi Gottschall expressed the belief that children learn more from implication than from direct teaching. His idea, he said, was to teach them of God gradually, letting their idea of Him wider as their intelligence grew.

Father Ahern told the audience that Catholic teachers had found the God concept a singularly easy one to inculcate in even the youngest children. In most cases, he said, the idea of God had already been given the child by the Catholic mother. He stressed the necessity of being authoritative in explanations to the young.

Maj. Brown Honored At Opportunity House

Maj. Ernest E. Brown was guest of honor at a luncheon given yesterday at Opportunity House, 915 New Jersey avenue northwest.

Speakers were J. Nelson Anderson, of the Federation of Business Mens Association; Robert Anderson, attorney for the Department of Justice; Miss Mae Helm, attorney for the Corporation Council; Mrs. J. M. Doran, who is prominent in social work in Georgetown, and Mrs. Francis T. Northcross, who conducts a daily radio program for housewives. Thirty guests were present. Arthur Clarendon Smith presided.

Juliana Death Called Suicide After Inquiry

Body Found in Garage 12 Hrs. After Shots Fell Brother.

The carbon monoxide death of Maurice Juliana, 28, whose body was found yesterday scarcely 12 hours after his brother, Victor, had been shot in the back, was officially termed a lover's suicide rather than a numbers war episode last night.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a suicide certificate and police announced they were satisfied Maurice's death had nothing to do with the wounding of Victor. Both brothers were alleged to be numbers agents here in the employ of a Baltimore operator who offered odds of 700 to 1.

Prevailing odds given by the local numbers ring is 600 to 1, lending credence to the theory Victor and Maurice incurred the enmity of their "business rivals."

Sister Finds Body.

Eleanor Juliana, 13-year-old "baby sister" of the brothers, discovered the body of Maurice a few minutes past noon yesterday when she entered the garage in the rear of the Juliana residence, 2105 Fourth street northeast, to get some firewood.

The dead man lay across the seat of his coupe, head resting on the left hand and feet hanging out of the car door. Eleanor's screams brought Brother Edward and Sister Lena, who summoned police. Dr. W. G. Fletcher of Casualty Hospital pronounced Juliana dead.

According to Coroner MacDonald, who examined the body at the scene and subsequently conducted an autopsy at the morgue, the man had been dead more than 24 hours. The car's engine was not running, although the ignition was still on. A supply of gasoline remained in the tank.

Green Hat a Mystery.

Coroner MacDonald said the monoxide fumes, by becoming so dense as to prevent combustion, could have stopped the motor. In Juliana's pockets was $24.65. On the seat was a woman's green hat, whose owner is unidentified.

Lina Juliana, who is 18, said Maurice seemed despondent the last few weeks following the breakup of a four-year romance.

Convinced that nothing suspicious attached to the death of Maurice, police last night turned their attention to his brother, Victor, and the others who figured in the brawl Monday night which sent the 26-year-old Juliana and Gorman Vincent, 27, colored, to hospitals with bullet wounds.

Wright and Juliana allegedly were shot by Harvey Jones, 27, colored, in a house in the 1600 block of Twelfth street northwest, following a quarrel which began at Turner's Arena. James is being held for investigation. He lives in the 200 block of C street southwest.

One Badly Hurt.

Juliana's wound is not believed to be serious. He is in Sibley Hospital; Wright in Emergency. The latter, wounded in the stomach, is in a serious condition. Neither would discuss the affray with police.

According to a high-ranking police official, who asked that his name be withheld pending completion of the investigation, Victor and Maurice Juliana were working for a Baltimore numbers operator, who was arrested here last August and held for investigation for a short time.

The officer believes the argument at the arena between Victor Juliana and Wright, on one side, and James on the other, climaxed by the shooting, was directly due to a numbers feud.

Dog Won't Budge When Police Find Master's Lost Car

Not knowing the whereabouts of his automobile did not worry Arthur B. Carter, of 1001 Twenty-third street northwest, but "Floppy" was in the car. This was a matter to cause him great concern.

Carter reported his automobile lost, strayed or stolen to the police Saturday night. He said "Floppy," a black and white fox terrier, was in the car.

Yesterday the car was found standing in 600 block Maryland avenue southwest by Fourth Precinct police. "Floppy" was inside and refused to come out despite police coaxing.

Police called Mrs. Carter who claimed the automobile and the dog. "I haven't slept a wink since 'Floppy' disappeared," Mrs. Carter told reporters.

Grayson Hears Inauguration Parade Hints

Discusses Celebration With D. C. Commissioners and Civic Leaders.

Prominent Washington residents yesterday made informal suggestions for the celebration of the President's inauguration at a conference called by Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson and held in the office of Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of District Commisioners.

Admiral Grayson, who Saturday accepted the chairmanship of the inaugural committee, said that no decisions were made but that many proposals were discussed. He said no definite plans can be announced until he confers with the President, probably today.

Indications are that the Commissioners will have a leading role in administering any program that is decided upon although a committee of District of Columbia residents also will be named.

"I merely wanted to get the views of some of Washington's representative residents before talking with the President," Admiral Grayson said in explaining the meeting.

Among those present at the conference, upon Admiral Grayson's invitation, were:

Larkin to Be Speaker.

John C. Larkin, authority on telephone accounting, will speak at tonight's dinner-meeting of the Washington Chapter of Cost Accountants at the Hamilton Hotel. The dinner will start at 6:30 o'clock and the scientific discussion at 8.

Janitor Guilty In Landlady's Murder Here

Norman W. Robinson, 27-year-old colored janitor, was found guilty late yesterday of murdering the proprietress of a Sixteenth street rooming house and then was hustled off to a "death row" cell in the District Jail, heavily guarded against his threat either to commit suicide or escape.

A first-degree murder verdict was returned against Robinson after a District Court jury had considered for three hours evidence that he clubbed to death Mrs. Florence Goodwin, who operated a fashionable rooming house on Sixteenth street. She was killed September 18.

Reports Robinson had sworn to take his own life in event an intended break for freedom failed, leaked out while the jury was deliberating his fate. Seventeen deputy marshals were in the hushed courtroom when the pale and lanky colored man was brought in to hear the verdict.

Six Stand Guard.

Six of the huskiest of the deputies stood directly around the prisoner while the foreman intoned the jury's decision that will send Robinson to the electric chair unless higher courts set aside the conviction.

Robinson was convicted of murder while perpetrating a felony. According to witnesses, he broke into the rooming house to rob the woman who formerly had employed him as janitor.

Fearing she had been aroused from her sleep by his movements and that she had seen him, he beat her to death with a heavy furnace shaker and then ramsacked the room, testimony showed.

Called Outstanding Detection.

Robinson's arrest and subsequent confession to the crime, was considered by police here an outstanding piece of scientific crime detection.

Police scraped Robinson's fingernails and from an analysis of the scrapings determined, according to their testimony, that they contained particles of the dead woman's flesh and clothing.

Under the law Robinson may not be sentenced until Justice Peyton Gordon, in whose court he was tried, rules on a motion for a new trial.

NATS' PITCHERS TOPPED BY APPLETON

The Washington Post

20 WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1936 X ****

Earned Run Averages Put Nat 'Ugly Duckling' 5th in Loop; Grove 1st

Griff Hurler Had Mark of 3.52; Grove Led With 2.81; Feller 2d; Nats Third in Club Pitching; Bridges, With 23, Won Most Games.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Pete Appleton, the former ugly duckling of the Washington pitching staff, stands revealed today as the Nats' most effective pitcher of the 1936 season.

Denied a starting role for long periods with his talents being wasted on the bench while inferior teammates were getting regular pitching assignments, Appleton can find solace in the official American League pitching records announced yesterday.

For in that important item known as "earned runs allowed," the severest gauge by which a pitcher's effectiveness can be measured—Appleton rated far above any other Washington pitcher and was, in fact, fifth among all the league hurlers.

Boston's Lefty Grove, for the second consecutive year and the seventh time in the twelve seasons he has been in the league, topped all the pitchers in effectiveness with an earned run average of 2.81 per game. Grove alone was able to show an earned run average below three per game.

Bob Feller Second.

Rating No. Two in effectiveness was Cleveland's sensational Bob Feller with an average of 3.34 for the 14 games in which he appeared. Johnny Murphy, of the Yankees, with an average of 3.38 was third, and Johnny Allen, of the Indians, with 3.44, was fourth.

Then followed Appleton with his earned-run average of 3.52, in fifth place among the league's 66 pitchers who figured in more than 45 innings.

Appleton's closest rival in effectiveness on the Washington Club was Buck Newsom, who gained fourteenth place with his average of 4.31. Monte Weaver, with a 4.35 figure, was sixteenth; Joe Cascarella, with 4.44, was twentieth, and Jimmy DeShong, who had the best won-and-lost percentage, was twenty-second with 4.62.

Third in Club Hurling.

Washington's pitching, on which had been heaped the most of the blame for the club's failure to finish better than fourth in the pennant race, did not deserve extreme censure, the averages reveal. The Nats' pitchers, with a collective earned run average of 4.58 per game, were third in the league in that respect. New York's pitchers led with a 4.17 average, and Boston's were second with 4.39.

Tommy Bridges, slender right-hander of the Tigers, finished the season with more victories than any other hurler with a record of 23 won and 11 lost. Vernon Kennedy, White Sox right-hander, with 21 victories and 9 defeats, was the only other hurler to win more than 20 games. Johnny Allen, Red Ruffing, of the Yankees, and Wes Ferrell, of the Red Sox, were 20-game winners.

Lloyd Brown, Cleveland southpaw, was the most active of all the league pitchers, hurling 301 innings, to beat out Tommy Bridges, who pitched 295 innings, for the honor.

Bridges Fanned Most.

Bridges was the strike-out king of the league, fanning 175 batters, but the sensational Feller contributed the greatest individual strike-out feat when he fanned 17 Athletics, to set a new major league strike-out record for a single game. Previously he had struck out 15 Browns in one game.

Herschberger Was West's 1st All-American

Chicago, Dec. 15 (AP).—Memory of the Midwest's early football glory lived again today in the death of Clarence Herschberger of Chicago.

The first of Amos Alonzo Stagg's great stars, whose exploits forced the late Walter Camp to go beyond the Appalachian mountains in 1898 for the first time in naming the all America team, took his own life yesterday by inhaling gas.

Herschberger, a little man in a day of gridiron giants, started his spectacular career under Stagg in 1894. Although he weighed only 158 pounds, he quickly established himself in the Midwest as a mighty kicker and exceptional runner. His fame grew in his own neighborhood, but it was not until 1898 when Camp saw the Maroons defeat Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, that Herschberger broke the East's monopoly on all America honors.

He was the first of Stagg's great triumvirate of field goal booters, rounded out later by the late Walter Eckersall and Judge Walter P. Steffen, Carnegie Tech's "commuting coach." So deadly was Herschberger's place and drop-kicking when he reached his peak that the Maroons based their attack on his talented toe.

Instead of concentrating on touchdown drives, Chicago's aim was to work the ball inside the opposition's 40-yard line. From there Herschberger established a dazzling record for field goals, which at the time were worth 5 points—as much as touchdowns. His punting was as great, his boots out of bounds usually keeping Maroon foes in the hole.

Herschberger entered the University of Chicago from Peoria, Ill., and except for a hunting accident, might not have become the Midwest's first All-America. After playing through the 1894 season, his parents withdrew permission to play the next year. He devoted the autumn of 1895 to hunting and suffered an accidental gun shot wound in the hand. His mother decided football less dangerous than hunting and gave him permission to return to the gridiron.

Herschberger, who ended his life after years of illness that prevented full attention to his real estate business, was credited with originating the on-side kick, recently legislated out of the game, and was said to have been one of the first to kick spiral punts.

As fine a student as athlete, Herschberger graduated with Pi Beta Kappa honors. He assisted Stagg at Chicago for two years, left his alma mater to coach all sports at Lake Forest (Ill.) College, and later became headmaster at Lake Forest Academy.

N. C. State Faces W. and M. Tonight

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 15.—North Carolina State will begin its Southern Conference basketball drive tomorrow night when it meets the strong William and Mary quint at 7:30 in Frank Thompson gymnasium at State.

Only two monogram players will be on State's starting team as only that many veterans were left for the 1936-37 quint after graduation last spring. The veterans are Capt. Neil Dalrymple, guard, and Connie Mac Berry, center.

The starting forwards are expected to be Adolph Honeycutt and Merton York, reserve holdovers. Expected to pair with Dalrymple at the other guard post is James Rennie, lanky junior, who also is a reserve holdover.

Big Fox Is Denned By Loudoun Hunt

Leesburg, Va., Dec. 5.—A big red fox that gave the Loudoun Hunt a splendid chase today was denned on the outline of the Selma estate after circling the course twice. The hunt met at 10 o'clock at Locust Hill, the home of Senator Phillip Campbell.

Bryan Replaces Buivid On All-East Grid Team

Chicago, Dec. 15 (AP).—Bucky Bryan, Tulane University halfback, was selected today by Dick Hanley, former Northwestern coach, to replace Ray (Buzz) Buivid, of Marquette, on the Eastern squad which meets the Western All-Stars in the annual Shrine benefit football game at San Francisco New Year's Day.

Buivid, All-America halfback and one of the country's greatest forward passers, was lost to the Eastern squad when Marquette accepted an invitation to meet Texas Christian in the Cotton Bowl battle at Dallas, Tex., New Year's Day.

Crowder Victor in D. C. Three-Cushion Tourney

Jerry Crowder defeated Eddie Smith last night at the Royal Recreation rooms, Fourteenth street northwest, 35-16 in the three-cushion District amateur billiards championship. Each of the contestants had high runs of three. Sixty-nine innings were played in quick time.

Crowder, who has a good opportunity to finish in the money, has played three, won two and lost one.

In the second game Everett Crouch defeated J. Murray, 35-25. The high run of the second game was six by Murray. J. Dodge beat J. Hair, 35-32, in the final game.

Miss Stephens No. 1 Woman In Sports

Olympic Heroine Honored by Associated Press' Annual Poll.

New York, Dec. 15.—Helen Stephens, the Fulton, Mo., flash who streaked down the Olympic 100-meter stretch in 11.4 and broke all records for the metric century, was acclaimed the year's No. 1 woman athlete in the sixth annual poll conducted by the Associated Press.

Miss Stephens' spectacular solo dash and the swift anchor leg she ran on the winning 400-meter as overwhelming as Jesse Owens' Olympic relay quartet crowned previous performances at home where she won three national A. A. U. championships, the 100-meter dash, discus throw and shotput. These exploits merited 105 points from 62 observers, 22 of whom nominated her for first place.

Just as she did in the vast stadium in Berlin before 100,000 spectators, Miss Stephens made a runaway of the poll, although her designation as queen athlete was not among the men.

Placing second to the 20-year-old Missourian was statuesque Alice Marble, of San Francisco, who emerged from a two-year forced retirement to win the national singles tennis championship by dethroning the four-time titleholder, Helen Jacobs. In the latest compilation of ballots, Miss Marble posted 84 points, including 13 No. 1 votes.

Red-headed Pamela (Pam) Barton, the 19-year-old London girl who became the first player in more than a quarter of a century to win both the British and American golf championships in one year, posted 64 points for third place. Fifty-two of Miss Barton's points were first place nominations.

Beauteous Eleanor Holm Jarrett, the backstroke champion, who rocked the Olympic boat and was dismissed from the team for violating training rules, polled 15 points to finish in a tie for sixth with Sonja Henie, figure-skating ace. Eleanor's supporters pointed out she has not been beaten in competition in seven years.

1. Helen Stephens, U. S. and Olympic track and field winner 105
2. Alice Marble, U. S. tennis champion 84
3. Pam Barton, British and U. S. golf champion 64
4. Helen Jacobs, Wimbledon tennis champion 35
5. Patty Berg, youthful American golf star 24
6. Eleanor Holm Jarrett, back stroke swimming champion 15
7. Sonja Henie, world figure-skating champion 15
8. Marjorie Gestring, Olympic springboard diving champion 14
9. Helen Wills Moody, former tennis queen 9
10. Lenore Knight Wingard, U. S. swimming champion 6

Scattered votes—Dorothy Poynton Hill, Olympic platform diving champion, 5; Rita Mastenbroek, Holland, Olympic swimming champion, 4; Katherine Rawls, national swimming champion, 3; 2 points each for Mary Hoerger, former springboard diving champion, and Kay Stammers, British tennis star; 1 point each for Stella Walsh, runner-up for Olympic sprint title, and Glenna Collett Vare, former golf champion.

Louis Will Meet Shucco-Al McCoy Victor in Boston

By the United Press.

Boston, Dec. 15.—Joe Louis has been signed to meet the winner of Friday night's Tony Shucco-Al McCoy New England heavyweight championship fight here, Matchmaker Rip Valenti announced tonight.

Valenti said the bout would be staged at one of the Boston baseball parks next summer and that he had agreed to pay the Detroit Bomber 40 per cent of the gate receipts and his opponent 20 per cent.

Chicago, Dec. 15 (AP).—Jim Mullen, matchmaker for the Chicago Stadium, said on his return from Cleveland today that Joe Louis, the Detroit heavyweight, has agreed to appear at the stadium during the week of February 5. Mullen indicated Louis' opponent might be Harry Thomas, Eagle Bend, Minnesota slugger.

Harvard Quits Boxing After This Year

By the United Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 15.—The committee on regulation of athletic sports at Harvard late today voted to discontinue intercollegiate boxing at the university after this year.

Beginning with the 1937-38 college year, the sport will be conducted on an intramural basis, with intramural championships replacing university championships.

No reason was given for the action. It was believed, however, that the move was instigated by the dispute growing out of the tie with Yale at New Haven last March. Harvard adherents claimed that under the intercollegiate system of point scoring Harvard should have been awarded the meet. They maintained that a different scoring system was employed in the Yale meet.

The athletic association's announcement said that Henry Lamar would continue as boxing coach, a position he has held since 1932.

Lamar needs no introduction to older Washington sports fans, who will remember his feats as football and basketball star at Western High and later at the Univeristy of Virginia, where he became captain of the school's Southern Conference boxing champions.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 15.—Joe Louis tossed the most expensive punch in the hsitory of the ring here last night. For throwing that one wallop—a left hook to the head which flattened Eddie Simms in 28 seconds—the Brown Bomber received exactly $20,000.

At a corresponding rate per punch, Jack Dempsey, heretofore the greatest money maker the squared circle ever knew, would have received millions for his two-round knockout of Luis Angel Firpo; Max Baer would have been a billionaire after his eleventh-round knockout of Primo Carnera, and

Pro Tourney Manager Is Ousted

Backed by 60 Leading Stars, He May Form His Own Group.

By the United Press.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 15.—A rift threatening the life of the Professional Golfers Association developed tonight when Robert E. Harlaw, dismissed P. G. A. tournament manager, threatened to form a rival body from a loyal bloc of its members unless he is reinstated.

This turn came after a day of bitter recrimination and charges by Harlow that he was "double-crossed" by George R. Jacobus, P. G. A. president.

The lid blew off when Harlow stepped ashore from the S. S. New Northland this morning on his return from the Nassau Open and was handed a telegram from Jacobus informing him "the executive committee has decided not to renew your contract, your duties to cease immediately."

But Harlow had anticipated the committee's action and when he landed he was armed with a petition signed by 60 of the Nation's leading money-playing golfers, demanding the job be restored to him.

The formal dismissal statement issued by Jacobus at Sarasota said the committee's action was taken because of Harlow's "outside activities" which include a well-paying syndicated newspaper column.

"You have expressed the desire several times to continue the outside work you assumed without knowledge or approval of the executive committee," Jacobus' telegram said. "In view of your strongly expressed desire we believe this other work will make you happier."

Harlow said Jacobus knew of his outside activities and even approved them publicly at the annual midwinter meeting here before the Miami Biltmore Open.

"This is merely a subterfuge to make the document of dismissal read nicely and avoid the real issues," he charged.

The stoutish former tournament manager said he was the victim of

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

England's difficulties with royal birth and heritage have not stopped with the King Edward VIII episode. On the heels of L'Affaire Simpson, which rocked the empire, now is developing L'Affaire Thankerton, which has created a fearful dither among the horsey set.

POVICH.

Thankerton, a brown 3-year-old colt, is, like Mrs. Simpson, a commoner, in turf parlance. That is, his dam is a half-breed and, therefore, the colt is not entitled to a certificate that he is a thoroughbred as the General Stud Book of England views it.

All of which would entail no complications inasmuch as half-bred horses are permitted to race in England. But Thankerton is now en route to America, where his entry will be filed for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap in California, and American racing authorities are faced with a delicate ruling.

Under the laws of the New York Jockey Club, which has charge of the thoroughbred registry in this country, Thankerton will not be permitted to run in the rich Santa Anita stake despite the fact that the horse finished third in this year's famous English Derby at Epsom Downs.

The rules of racing in this country state that "only those horses are eligible for registry which automatically trace, in all their lines, to animals recorded in the American Stud Book or in a recognized stud book in another country." With England helpless to certify that Thankerton is a thoroughbred, the colt appears automatically barred from the Santa Anita stake.

But L'Affaire Thankerton nevertheless has all the elements of a case that might create a schism in racing bodies in America. Hitherto, the New York Jockey Club's authority has been unquestioned, but Santa Anita officials are hardly expected to stand by and see a horse that finished third in the English Derby, a horse that is thoroughly acceptable in England, excluded from its proud handicap.

Publicity-crazed California would make much of the presence of Thankerton in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap. The horse actually had a four-length lead as the field swung into the stretch in the English Derby. Thankerton would be good "copy" and perhaps the Santa Anita folks may feel that the wrath of the Jockey Club is worth risking and let the colt run.

The complexities of the thoroughbred registry is strikingly illustrated in the reason why English turf authorities regard Thankerton as a half-breed. It's dam, Verdict, is not eligible to registry in the General Stud Book, nor are any of its progeny, despite the fact that Verdict's pedigree can be traced for 100 years. Beyond that, however, its thoroughbred lines are blurred and thus registry is denied the mare and its get.

England's General Stud Book dates from 1781 and every horse ever registered therein is one of the progeny of three Arabian sires imported in 1728. For that reason the names of the three are famous—Turk, Arabian and Godolphin.

Similarly, every registered thoroughbred in North and South America, the countries of Europe, Australia and the British dominions trace their ancestry in the male line to one of the three—Turk, or Arabian or Godolphin. There were 174 other English sires, according to the Britannica, but only these three mentioned were able to keep their descent intact to this day.

Although England went to Arabia for its pure-blood stock that was to prove the foundation of the thoroughbred industry, English or American-bred horses of today would hopelessly outclass the best horses that could be found in Arabia.

Careful breeding, a climate more conducive to strength and better feeding has been responsible for the superiority of English-bred thoroughbreds over the Arab, despite the unchallenged pure blood of the latter animal.

The Arabian horse would not have even a remote chance of beating an English thoroughbred. The fact was demonstrated emphatically 50 years ago when an ardent admirer of the Arab horse persuaded the British Jockey Club to stage a race exclusively for Arabs.

The race was staged at New Market in 1884 and was won by Admiral Tryon's Asil. In the following year this same horse Asil, which was given more than 30 pounds in weight, was beaten 20 lengths by Iambic, a very moderate horse owned by the Duke of Portland over a 3-mile course at New Market.

The British took the Arabian sires and Arabian mares and compounded a race horse that truly should make the Arabs fold their tents and silently steal away in their shame as bunglesome breeders.

Georgetown Basketers Play Princeton Cage Team Tonight

Eagles Face Md. Normal In Tilt Here

Having satisfactorily demonstrated the power hidden in the fancy frills of their Blue and Gray livery, Georgetown's ambitious Hoyas converge on Tigertown tonight for their second test of the season, playing Princeton in an inter-conference engagement. The game is one of two involving local teams. American University will entertain Maryland State Normal in the other.

Tonight's game is doubly important for Georgetown, for in some small measure at least the prestige of the Eastern Conference, against that of the Eastern League, will be at stake. Princeton long has been a recognized power in the league, which embraces Penn, Cornell, Columbia, Yale and a couple of the other better known schools.

Georgetown is a charter member of the Eastern Conference, which, with Temple, Pittsburgh, Carnegie Tech, Penn State and West Virginia as member teams, is considered the fastest organized loop east of the Mississippi. The winners of each do not meet in a play-off series, which would be an attractive and profitable venrute, hence every game between representatives of the rival circuits is considered somewhat of a test of relative strength by the fans.

Play Is Spotted.

In annihilating Western Maryland Monday night the Hoyas proved they have the makings of a good, if not a great, team, but tonight they must get the utmost out of it to win. Alhough brilliant in spots against the Terrors, Georgetown's play also was a trifle shabby in other spots, and a letdown tonight might easily be fatal.

Coach Fred Mesmer still is undecided about a regular line-up, and has not selected a starting team for the game. It is unlikely, however, that he will send the same five who started against Western Maryland postward. In that group were Murphy and Gibeau, forwards; Bertrand, center; Zola and Nau, guards. They worked well enough, but power could be added to the attack by the insertion of Carroll Shore, a forward; Ed Kurtyka, guard, and "Big Mike" Petroskey, center. Petroskey looked good against the Terrors, despite the fact that he still favors the surgeon's hem-stitching in his side. Georgetown is going to be only as good as its center this year, and Mesmer is counting heavily on Mike.

The Hoyas have a better scoring eye, on the whole, than last year's quintet, what with Carroll, Murphy and Kurtyka sinking shots from every conceivable angle. The latter is at his best close in to the backboard, while the others prefer to stand off and take set shots. Kurtyka also is a fine hand at retrieving erratic shots caroming off the board.

American figures to break into the win column tonight after suffering setbacks in two previous games. The Eagles took a sound drubbing from Johns Hopkins in their inaugural, but held Hampden-Sydney on more even terms, the final score to the contrary notwithstanding. A lack of suitable reserves seems to be Coach Walter Young's crying need at the moment.

Five Washington pitchers finished with a better than .500 average, with DeShong's 18 victories and 10 defeats constituting the best record. Apleton, with 14 victories and 9 defeats, rated a close second to DeShong in winning percentage. Monte Weaver with 6 victories and 4 defeats, Earl Whitehill with 14 and 11 and Buck Newsom with 17 and 15, followed in that order.

Newsom, who walked 146 batters, lost the distinction of being the league's wildest pitcher to Kennedy, of the White Sox, who walked 147.

Newsom shared with Ferrell, of Boston, and Bridges, of Detroit, the honor of starting the most games, 38, but he was relieved in 14. In complete games, however, he was fourth in the league behind Ferrell, Bridges and Tuffing, with his 24—eight more than DeShong could finish. Appleton, who started 20, finished 12, and Whitehill finished exactly half of his 24 starts.

Paradisical, in Game Performance, Wins Tropical Feature

Filly Annexes Coconut Purse

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 15 (AP).—Paradisical, lightweight 4-year-old filly carrying the I. J. Collins silks, turned in a very game performance to win the Coconut Grove purse of 1 mile before a good sized crowd here this afternoon. The bay daughter of In Memoriam, a Churchill Downs handicap winner in her most recent endeavor, needed one of George Seabo's most powerful rides to squeeze home by a nose.

Mrs. C. Hainsworth's Blackbirder was an easy second, two lengths clear of J. F. Letendre's Furfiber. The latter was second choice to the winner, which paid $5.70 for $2 and ran the 8 furlongs in 1:39 3-5.

It was a two-horse affair into the stretch. Furfiber dashed into a two lengths lead over Paradisical entering the backstretch, but Seabo sent the Collins representative into a narrow advantage before reaching the far turn. The pair remained "locked" to the top of the home lane, where Paradisical drew away. Then Blackbirder, badly outrun in the early stages, came with a late rush that forced Paradisical to give her last ounce of stamina before the issue was decided. Furfiber had virtually no contention for the show position.

Guy Fawkes, a galloping winner at Narragansett, repeated that easy conquest in the five and one-half furlongs of the sixth contest. The 2-year-old son of Happy Time won by four lengths, with Jimmie Lynch easing up in the late stages. Tellingyou held a similar margin over the fast-closing Jub Jub for the place. Guy Fawkes lost no time dashing away from the field and merely toyed with his opposition. The colt was a 7-to-10 favorite.

The unfashionable apprentice, A. Schmidl, had the better of a riding duel with Irving Anderson in the third event when he drove the $27.70 shot, Kindred Spirit, to a nose score over Second Guess. M. J. Brennan was third, three lengths away. Regula Baddun ran the well-liked Queen Vic into the ground early, only to stop in the stretch as Second Guess and Kindred Spirit moved up to fight it out, with the latter gaining the photo decision on the inside.

Ridge Mor Wins.

Ridge Mor, highly recommended by the clockers, had a hard time taking a neck victory over Sheknows in the 6-furlong fourth race. Flavor trailed the pair by two lengths. Bellum, slight choice over the winner, was last away and could not menace at any time. Bobby Merritt broke Sheknows fast and urged the filly into a daylight advantage over Ridge Mor. The latter collared the leader in the last furlong and prevailed in the bitter drive to the judges, paying $6.20.

Again, 3-year-old daughter of Teddy, was a well played winner of the second dash. Clarence Watters hustled the G. M. Beck colorbearer to the front a few strides after the start and Again had no trouble opening up an unbeatable lead over Westdav. Four lengths separated the pair at the wire. Step Aside, a paddock tip, came from last place at the break to land third money, two lengths behind. Bravado, the favorite, never could reach a threatening position. Again returned $8.30.

R. R. B. Has Court Team.

Making its debut in basketball ranks, the Railroad Retirement Board court team absorbed a 36 to 13 defeat from Mount Vernon Athletic Club in a Central High Community League game. Members of the newly organized R. R. B. five are Caruso, Jones, Habermyer, Stuyvesant, Brown, Nitschke, Wilke, Walsh and Haley.

Roosevelt C. C. League

By the Associated Press.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, FAST.

FIRST RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place easily. Went to post at 1:56. Off at 2:06. Winner, Mrs. E. I. Wade's br. g. (2), by High Time—Sweet Bean. Trained by J. Brouse. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:06.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RAFTER, $4.70, $3.00, $2.70; GOLDEN THOUGHT, $11.80, $8.60; BULLY FLORA, $5.50.

RAFTER was hustled away from the gate, moved up rapidly on the outside, but had to be hard ridden to gain the verdict by a small margin. GOLDEN THOUGHT, showing excellent speed, set fast pace, saved ground and made a game effort. BULLY FLORA came with a rush in the final furlong. ZEBAR well up all the way.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start fair. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:31. Off at 2:33½. Winner, G. M. Beck's b. f. (3), by Teddy—Festive. Trained by J. Peters. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13 1-5.

ARGIE	(Louman)	111	4	3	6½	9½	12	12	8.70

Two-dollar mutuels paid—AGAIN, $8.30, $7.40, $5.20; WESTDAY, $30.50, $16.80; STEP ASIDE, $6.60.

AGAIN, running in best form, outran field from start and never was let down. WESTDAY was stout factor all the way. STEP ASIDE broke very slow, was sent up with a rush on the outside, lost ground around the turn, but closed gamely. DESTINED ran a fair race. BLOOD tired badly after showing early speed.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:00. Off at 3:01. Winner, F. L. Tyler's ch. g. (4), by Sunair—Cathkin. Trained by W. A. Kelley. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13 1-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	Str.	Fin.	Straight
KINDRED SPIRIT	(Schmidl)	110	4	4	3¹	5²	3²	1ns	$12.85

APPOMATTOX	(Couci)	112	1	8	7¹	6½	12	12	40.40

Two-dollar mutuels paid—KINDRED SPIRIT, $27.70, $11.30, $6.90; SECOND GUESS, $3.80, $3.40; M. J. BRENNAN, $5.50.

KINDRED SPIRIT, away well, was allowed to drop back soon after the start, but came with a rush on inside and just got up to win. SECOND GUESS was probably best, but Anderson rode a weak finish. M. J. BRENNAN came with a powerful rush at end. REGULA BADDUN had plenty of speed but stopped badly. QUEEN VIC could never get to the front.

DAILY DOUBLE, FIRST AND THIRD RACES, PAID $43.00.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:30. Off at 3:34½. Winner, M. Marmorstein's br. h. (5), by Morvich—Sand Dust. Trained by J. Hastie. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	Str.	Fin.	Straight
RIDGE MOR	(Horn)	115	4	3	2¹½	2¹½	2²	1ns	$2.10

PARALDA	(Cuscianna)	108	10	10	10¹	8½	9½	8¹	63.45
JOHNNYCAKE	(Hightshoe)	108	8	9	7³	9¹	10¹	9²	48.65
KING BEE	(I. Hanford)	113	6	6	6²	6²	6½	10³	32.90
ROYAL WAGER	(Bierman)	110	11	7	8¹½	10²	11²	11²	54.65
PRINCE POMPEY	(Cartwright)	110	3	11	12	12	12	12	48.35

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RIDGE MOR, $6.20, $3.70, $3.10; SHEKNOWS, $6.80, $4.50; FLAVOR, $3.50.

RIDGE MOR, away fast, was rated along back of the fast early pace, began to close ground around turn, caught SHEKNOWS at the furlong pole and won going away. SHEKNOWS broke alertly, set a fast pace and held on gamely. FLAVOR was hard ridden and closed fast. DEMONSTRATION had plenty of speed. SAM WORTHY is worth noting. BELLUM broke slow but finished with a rush.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000. The Coconut Grove. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place easily. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:03½. Winner, I. J. Collins' b. f. (4), by In Memoriam—Madrigal. Trained by A. Miller. Value to winner, $700; second, $175; third, $85; fourth, $40. Time, 1:39 3-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
PARADISICAL	(Seabo)	109	8	5	2h	1½	1h	1¹	1ns	$1.85
BLACKBIRDER	(Long)	113	3	8	7¹½	6⁴	4¹	3²	2ns	19.65

GREEK FIRE	(R. Watson)	109½	6	3	5³	3h	3¹½	4³	4h	7.95
GENIE PALATINE	(Kurtsinger)	109	5	7	4h	4¹½	5²	5¹	5³	9.10
SANDY BOOT	(G. Watson)	105	7	6	8	8	7⁴	7⁴	6³	6.20
JINNEE	(Rosen)	108	2	1	3h	5⁴	6²	6⁴	7⁴	75.50
BRANDON PRINCE	(I. Hanford)	108	1	2	6²	7h	8	8	8	15.35

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PARADISICAL, $5.70, $3.80, $3.00; BLACKBIRDER, $15.00, $7.00; FURFIBER, $3.20.

PARADISICAL got away well, was sent to the front when field was straightened out in run down backstretch, made FURFIBER stop and then drew away, but tired and gamely stalled off the determined bid of BLACKBIRDER. The latter, badly outrun for the first half mile, circled field and closed with a rush and would have won in a few more strides. FURFIBER moved up menacingly around the turn but weakened badly. He had no excuse. GREEK FIRE was kept well out in the middle of the track and tired suddenly. GENIE PALATINE ran a good race.

SIXTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $700. The Coquina. For 2-year-olds which have never won two races. Start good. Won eased up; place driving. Went to post at 4:33. Off at 4:39½. Winner, A. C. Norris' br. c. (2), by Happy Time—Rocket Glare. Trained by L. A. Brusie. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:06.

ISADOR	(Deering)	115	5	12	10²	10²	11²	11³	18.20
BOLD GENERAL	(Francesco)	111½	11	9	9²	12	12	12	202.25

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GUY FAWKES, $3.40, $3.10, $2.70; TELLINGYOU, $24.00, $15.00; JUB JUB, $4.70.

GUY FAWKES, much the best, assumed lead early, galloped along and was being eased up at end. TELLINGYOU, well up all the way. JUB JUB broke good but was crowded back, was taken to the outside in stretch and finished with a rush. AMHURST had speed for half a mile then tired. FIRE FINCH closed a big gap.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won galloping; place driving. Went to post at 5:05. Off at 5:06. Winner, Victor Emanuel's b. g. (3), by Snob II—Dark Flight. Trained by J. P. Smith. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:47.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight

TERPSICHORE	(Cuscianna)	108	4	5	3¹½	3½	6²	7	7	14.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIGHT RAVEN, $4.90, $4.30, $3.00; ANHELATION, $13.00, $5.30; WISE WILL, $3.70.

NIGHT RAVEN, much the best, was sent to front early, rated along to the far turn, where he opened a wide gap and was only galloping at end. ANHELATION moved up very fast. WISE WILL closed a big gap. THIRTEEN STARS moved up gamely around turn, but weakened in last sixteenth. PEACEFUL performed poorly.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place easily. Went to post at 5:33. Off at 5:33½. Winner, Brandon Stable's ch. c. (4), by Tutti-Frutti—Curiosity Box. Trained by T. M. Waller. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:41.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight

Selections at Tropical Park.

Dear Al:

I received a letter from Clocker Mike today, so let's devote this to notes and dimes: There are three sets of brothers in the jockeys' room . . . Bobby and George Watson, Sammy and Joe Renick and Ira and Carl Hanford . . . latest tabulations show there are 850 horses at Hialeah . . . many of them are vanned over to Tropical Park . . . for their racing engagements . . . Earl Sande, one of the all-time saddle greats, is now a full-fledged trainer . . . he trains for Maxwell Howard, New York sportsman and has eleven horses in his charge . . . he is reported to have a sharp juvenile in the group named Coup de Grace . . . BILL.

First race—Count Me gets in with 107 pounds and gets weight from most of the serious contenders. Thus rigged, I believe he can account for chief money. Moretide breaks in the rail position and has good early speed that should make him a factor. Bay Buddy is a possibility.

Second race—Amqui is a fair sort and appears to have speed enough to cope successfully with this field. R. Watson will do the riding. Lotofus should make the most of that inside position and is the one to beat. Vitofol to take care of the others.

Third race—Blue King, a winner in Maryland, may need a longer route, but I'm going to try to make him take this sprint. Ethel's Choice, with Anderson up, is a threat. Flickering to take the show award.

Fourth race—Quickly seems well placed here, despite the 114-pound assignment. Should overcome the outside post position. Sandy Bill looms as the one to beat. Chimney Top had good speed in Maryland and the present soft condition of the track gives this one a chance.

Fifth race—Wha Hae should go well at this short route. Wall knows the horse and I expect him to make no mistakes. Grand Duke was a bear at Laurel and looms as the one to defeat. Lady Higloss should make a money appearance.

Sixth race—Albania is from the Denemark Stable and should have benefitted from the long rest. Never came quite up to expectations in Maryland, but I'm confident this one will make amends today. Deduce is fit and ready. Penalong surprised twice during the fall and may upset the dope here.

Seventh race—Sir Rose did not like the Bowie track, although he ran creditable races. This mile route suits and we may get a good price. Busby and Lone Hand to take care of the place and show awards.

Eighth race—Brother Newt, Gay Minetta and Trujillo is the way I prefer them in the day's finale. Blakeen is an outsider with a fighting chance

Wheat Prices Decline With Profit-Taking

Increased Margins Asked Also Tend to Check Upward Course.

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 15.—Despite flurried momentary upturns to new peak prices, wheat today averaged lower, largely because of profit-taking, together with increased margins asked by commission houses.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were unchanged to 1⅝ cents lower compared with yesterday's finish, December, 133¾@133⅞; May 129½@129⅝; July, 117⅛@117¼. Corn, 1¼@2⅛ down; December, 107⅞@108; May new, 104⅛@104⅜; July new, 100⅞@101. Oats, ½@⅞ off; May, 50⅜@50½, and rye varying from ¼ decline to 1⅛ gain May, 106⅝. Provisions results were unchanged to 15 cents setback.

The value of memberships reached its low point this year at $89,000 December 1, while the highest price was $174,000, February 19.

Stock Market Upward Course Checked by Late Selling

By Frederick Gardner.

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Dec. 15.—Late selling chilled the stock market's advancing spirit today, although a smattering of industrial specialties managed to retain gains of fractions to a point or more. The list whipped up considerable speed in the first hour or so when the ticker tape fell behind floor dealings for a while. Increased offerings then began to appear and the volume dwindled until the last hour when the pace picked up momentum of the downside.

The Associated Press average of 60 issues was off .1 of a point at 70.8. Transfers totaled 2,483,300 compared with 2,865,920 Monday.

More public buying was noted in boardrooms, especially in issues selling under $20 a share, and this was attributed by brokers principally to the increase of idle funds resulting from the record flow of dividends.

In an interview after the close, President Charles R. Gay of the stock exchange expressed "grave concern" over the recent flurry in low-priced issues. Activity in the "penny" stocks, he said, usually means "the uninformed person is coming into the market."

The steels were given a run for a time on indications mill operations will continue at an unusually high level over the next month or so.

A few amusements were lively again as November earnings of some of the leading moving picture producers were figured at about double those for the same 1935 month.

A Tennessee Federal court injunction against further expansion of Tennessee Valley Authority activities helped the utilities, although the majority of these were behind small minus signs at the finish.

Motors were droopy throughout. One or two rails enjoyed support, but the carriers as a whole seemed to be muscle-bound while waiting for the Interstate Commerce Commission to decide whether emergency freight rates should be extended.

Store Issues in Demand.

Several merchandising issues responded moderately to an optimistic survey of holiday spending by the National Retail Dry Goods Association. Another boost in export copper rates buoyed mining shares only momentarily. Higher prices for the red metal, it was feared, might inspire overproduction despite increased consumption.

Stocks did not have the benefit of a bulge in commodities which took place yesterday. Rubber futures soared and zinc was lifted, but corn at Chicago dropped 1¼ to 2⅛ cents a bushel, wheat was unchanged to 1⅜ lower and cotton yielded 35 to 70 cents a bale. Bonds were a bit indefinite and foreign currencies quiet.

That Wall Street is not too downbearted was indicated by the transfer of two stock exchange seats, one for $104,000 and the other for $105,000. The previous sale last week was at $97,000.

Shares tilting forward included United States Steel preferred at 143, Bethlehem 75⅜, General Electric 52⅞, Westinghouse 148½, American Radiator 25⅜, Yellow Truck 19¾, Warner Brothers 17¾, Canada Dry 25¼, Commercial Solvents 18, Public Service of New Jersey 49, Northern Pacific 27½, American Smelting 97⅛, Baldwin Locomotive 10½, Sears Roebuck 97¾ and du Pont 108¼.

Newport Industries dropped 3¼ at 35¼. Among lesser losers were U. S. Steel, 78; Allied Chemical, 232; General Motors, 69¾; Chrysler, 123¾; Western Union, 81⅛; Santa Fe, 71⅞; Union Pacific, 131; Consolidated Edison, 45⅛; Columbia Gas, 18; Anaconda, 52¾; Kennecott, 60⅜; Douglas Aircraft, 73½; American Rolling Mill, 34¾; U. S. Rubber, 46¼, and Allis-Chalmers, 76.

Trading in the bond market set the most active pace in more than a month today as buying in speculative rail issues heightened. The aggressive demands for carrier loans was interpreted in trading circles as an expression of increasing confidence in the business outlook for the first quarter of 1937.

In the van of the carrier advance were issues of the St. Louis-San Francisco, Seaboard Air Line and Missouri Pacific. North Western Liens also made headway, the 4½s of 2037 gaining 2¾ to 29½ and the general 4s adding 2 at 44¾. Florida East Coast 5s and certificates were others to find buyers.

The rest of the domestic list was less demonstrative. Increased offerings forced industrials and some utilities slightly lower. Foreign issues were mostly higher.

Uruguayan loans moved up as much as 3 points, while Argentina divisional issues also attracted support. Japanese obligations continued to reflect the uneasy Far Eastern situation. Yokahama 6s proved to be an exception and moved up.

Little business was done in United States Government bonds and the list closed generally lower, with setbacks ranging to 7-32 of a point. One or two Treasuries moved up a bit, the best gain being 6.32.

Total transactions amounted to $17,248,000, face value, for all bonds, compared with $13,673,000 on Monday. It was the heaviest volume since November 6, when $18,765,000 was traded.

The Associated Press averages were little changed on the day. The widest swing was made by the ten foreign issues, which added .2 of a point, at 71.5.

The flotation of an unusually large number of new issues also marked the day. Investment bankers brought out eight new loans, with a total face value of roundly $79,000,000.

Export Copper, Lead, Zinc at New Highs

New York, Dec. 15 (AP).—Prices of export copper and domestic zinc were advanced again today, the second increase in two days, to establish new peaks since 1930. Zinc for delivery at East St. Louis was quoted by a leading producer at 5.35 cents a pound, a rise of .10 of a cent, while copper for export was sold at 11.12½ cents, an increase of .22½ of a cent.

Industrial Gain Is Reported by Major Nations

But International Trade Is Only 38.4% of 1929 Average.

New York, Dec. 15.—World industrial production continued to advance during October, according to the monthly statement on foreign economic conditions made public today by the National Industrial Conference Board. Increases in output in Canada, Netherlands, France, Germany, Norway and the leading South American countries were sufficient to more than offset isolated declines in a few minor countries. Activity in the United States and Great Britain remained at about the same level as during the preceding month.

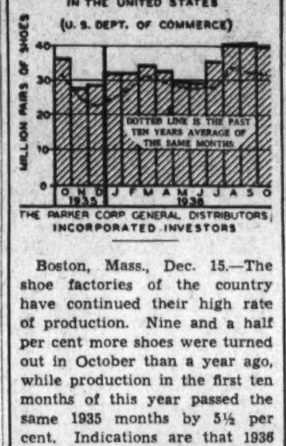
Industrial activity in Germany was well maintained during October. An intensive drive for raw material self-sufficiency within four years has been undertaken. The expansion necessary to carry out this program, however, may place a serious strain on the financial structure of the country.

Reports from Great Britain indicate that the volume of activity is now about 8.5 per cent higher than the average 1935 level. Recovery is continuing on an increasingly broad front. Building activity, however, declined during September and October.

Improvement in France is based to a considerable extent on the desire to replenish low raw material stocks before their prices increase further. Building activity in France is the lowest in many years.

International trade advanced seasonally in September and reached 38.4 per cent of the 1929 average, according to the combined index of the value of trade in 75 countries, computed in terms of gold. The September figure compares with 36.4 per cent in the preceding month and with 33.9 per cent in September, 1935.

Shoe Output Headed For All-Time Record



Boston, Mass., Dec. 15.—The shoe factories of the country have continued their high rate of production. Nine and a half per cent more shoes were turned out in October than a year ago, while production in the first ten months of this year passed the same 1935 months by 5½ per cent. Indications are that 1936 will chalk up another all-time record for shoe production.

Social Security Forgets Wives, Heimann Says

Amendment to Present Act Is Suggested by Credit Executive.

New York, Dec. 15.—Pointing out that the social security act provides some measure of protection for the majority of American workers after they reach 65, Henry H. Heimann, executive manager of the National Association of Credit Men, declares that it develops the possibility of a new class arising: "the forgotten woman."

In explanation, he points out that this development arises from the future application of the act's provisions and says that it would therefore seem advisable to make an early amendment to the social security act by which there would be protection not only for the working man but also his wife after his death.

"Under the present set-up," Heimann say, "the husband can receive his benefits after he has reached 65. But upon his death, his wife is not protected for the rest of her life except in such States as maintain an old-age pension system which in contrast to the old-age-benefit system we are discussing is more of a charity than an earned payment. If the sum to his credit is not entirely used up by the time of his death, the balance is scheduled to be paid, in a lump sum, to his estate. The history of lump-sum payments to estates and widows, however, is too full of cases in which the assets were dissipated through unwise management."

Kitchen Scales Won't Weigh Tons of Coal

You probably have no facilities for weighing coal when it is delivered to your home . . . and you likewise probably have no way to determine the quality of coal you purchase.

You naturally want to know that any coal you buy is exactly as represented—both as to weight and quality. In fairness to yourself and in the interest of making your fuel expenditures do maximum work, beware of buying coal from unknown persons—beware of buying coal from trucks bearing other State license plates, unless you know the dealer.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

The foreign exchange market was quiet yesterday and currency fluctuations narrow.

In New York the pound sterling and French franc were unchanged, the former at $4.94¾ and the latter at 4.66¼ cents. Swiss francs, at 22.98 cents, were off .00½ of a cent, while the Netherlands guilder was up .01 of a cent at 54.46 cents.

The Argentine "free rate" peso, at 30.40 cents, the Shanghai dollar at 29.85 cents and the Canadian dollar at 100.12½ cents, remained unchanged from yesterday's close.

The dollar in London gained ⅛ of a cent, closing at 4.90⅝ to the pound. In Paris it finished at the equivalent of 4.66 cents to the franc, against the New York overnight close of 4.656 cents.

Japanese for disseminating what they considered rumors deliberately designed to force all China into panic.

It was emphasized that with Chiang alive, efforts will be made to hasten negotiations for his release.

One effect of the false report of his execution, it was believed, would be to infuriate Marshal Chang additionally against the Japanese and make easier the problem of the central government which hopes to induce him to lessen his drastic demands for money and territory so that his vast Manchurian army may have a new homeland.

Domei had said that Marshal Chang had announced he had executed members of Generalissimo Chiang's bodyguard and officials with him, including Gen. Chiang Tso-pin, former ambassador to Japan.

"After his capture, I urged Generalissimo Chiang to declare war against Japan," Domei quoted Marshal Chang as broadcasting from the Sianfu radio station.

Those executed with the generalissimo, Domei said, included Gens. Chu Chiang-huo, governor of Hupeh province; Chen Cheng, commander of bandit suppression forces in Shensi, Suiyuan and Ninghsia provinces, and Chiang Fang-chen, Yang Fu-cheng and Chen Chao-yung.

Martial law was declared in Nanking after the Domei announcement, and a drastic censorship was placed on news dispatches.

In Nanking, it was explained at 1 a. m. that martial law was declared "in view of unrest following the Sianfu incident." All public meetings and street demonstrations were prohibited.

The Nanking war office announced last night that its divisions had encircled Sianfu along a line about 15 miles outside the city but had been ordered not to attack until peace negotiations had failed.

Nanking troops had occupied the towns of Tungkwan, Hsienyang and Weinan.

Gen. Ho Ying-chin, who had arrived to take command of the northern forces, had ordered that the campaign to rid Suiyuan Province of pro-Japanese Manchu-Mongol invaders be continued "in accordance with Gen. Eralissimo Chiang Kai-shek's plan."

Chaos in China Expected After Chiang Capture serious blow for Japanese policy.

Both Nanking and Tokyo openly accuse Moscow of pulling the strings which have let loose this sensational development. Tempered observers here are highly dubious as to the justification of accusing Russia of any complicity in the plot. Nonetheless there is less doubt that the upheaval will prove favorable to Russia's plans for opposing Japanese strategy in China.

Last year the Chinese Communist army apparently under instructions from Moscow, moved out of southern China to the north and west and has recently formed a buffer between Sinkiang Province, controlled by Russia, and the Japanese-dominated sections of northern China. The coup d'etat staged by Chang Hsueh-liang, who was supposedly checking the eastward push of the Chinese Communists, seems destined to assist the Russian effort to block an advance of the wedge which Japan is trying to drive into Inner Mongolia.

It is not believed here Tokyo will take advantage of the recently concluded treaty with Germany to send her armies into the inaccessible districts where Chang Hsueh-liang has his troops. But the anti-Communist pact made with Berlin may easily be invoked to justify an extension of Japanese military control over the Shantung Peninsula and indeed all the provinces of northern China which are within relatively easy reach.

It could be claimed such a movement is necessitated by the accession of Communist strength afforded by Chiang's death.

British officials here recall that only a fortnight ago Leith-Ross, at a dinner of the Chinese Association in London, delivered an obviously inspired address urging British loans to the Nanking government. In recent months the ties between Nanking and London have been strengthened by negotiations looking toward British exploitation of the southwest provinces. Present developements suggest the inside track Great Britain was establishing with Chiang Kai-shek, particularly in the Yangtze Valley, may be subjected to stronger rivalry from other powers.

For the United States, interested in a stable China for both political and commercial reasons, the present crisis is similarly disturbing. In so far as Chiang's administartion meant internal peace and economic progress his assassination is clerly an event which will be highly disturbing to Washington.

It is not believed here that Chang Hsueh-liang is sincere in his statements in behalf of a "popular front" government in China and, if necessary, an alliance with Russia to stop Japanese aggression. The "Young Marshal" is regarded as being before all else anxious to restore his greatly diminished popularity. He believes this can best be done by taking advantage of the general anti-Japanese sentiment, no matter how recklessly.

For the past nine months his troops in central China have been fraternizing with the Communist army. Recently Nanking ordered that they be transferred to the seacoast province of Fukien. That order doubtless paved the way for the drastic action which the son of the late Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria has seen fit to take. The consequences of that action are clearly of world-wide import.

Visit to Shensi Proved Gen. Chiang's Lone False Step in Unification Plan

Chang Turned Tables on Leader on Visit for Showdown.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Nanking, Wednesday), Dec. 16.—Less than two months ago, on October 29, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek China's strong man, quietly celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his birth. Obeying his request, the nation staged no gala celebrations, presented him few gifts.

Of these the most treasured were a steel sword given to him by the children of Kiangsu province and 100 crack American and Italian bombers, presented by millions of his followers from New York's Chinatown to Tibet.

The day marked a climax of Gen. Chiang's sensational career. He was then at the height of his power and could look forward to even greater accomplishments as China's unity became — largely through his efforts—a reality. But one mis-step: his visit to Sianfu in Shensi province, where he planned a showdown with his lieutenant, Chang Hsueh-liang, proved to be his undoing.

Chiang Kai-shek was born in a well-to-do family in the small village of Chikow, Chekiang province. His father died while he was still a child. A few years later his mother, whom Chiang used to visit in his giant Savoia bomber, sent him to a Ningpo shop to serve as an apprentice. Boredom drove the boy to enter the Hangchow Military School, despite the family's protests.

Promising as a Boy.

There the youth showed such promise that the provincial government sent him to the famous Paotingfu Military Academy to continue his education. Later he was dispatched to the Tokyo Military Academy, from which he was graduated shortly before the first revolution of 1911.

Complete obscurity veils Gen. Chiang's life during the next 12 years. He is known to have taken part in some expeditions against Yuan Shih-kai, when that wily politician attempted to set himself upon the imperial throne. Official biographers also credit him with revolutionary work, the nature of which is, however, never specified.

Chiang's first plunge into the world's headlines was made in 1923, when, as the chief of staff of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Cantonese army, he personally led 10,000 men in an attack upon the walled City of Waichow, the last stand of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming, the Cantonese Minister of War and a traitor to the revolution." Only 900 men lived to enter the city, from which Gen. Chen had already made his exit aboard a foreign gunboat.

Crowned with laurels, Gen. Chiang, in the traditional manner of a Chinese warlord, retired to a small Buddhist temple to show his disdain for material achievements. The spiritual interlude, however, lasted but a few months. The political atmosphere was charged with uneasiness. Foreign powers were renewing their efforts to wrest concessions from war torn China. Ideas generated in Moscow were electrifying millions of Asiatics, and Dr. Sun, "the Father of the Chinese Revolution," was beginning to look with favor upon the Muscovite wooers.

Senses Future.

Sensing the significance of the events, Gen. Chiang left for Soviet Russia to study military tactics. The bolshevists recognized his ambition and ability and showered him with attentions. On his return to Canton he was appointed by Dr. Sun, who was already flanked by Michael Borodin and Gen. Galen (Gen. Bluecher), now the head of Russia's army in the Soviet Far East, to reorganize the Cantonese army. Shortly afterward he was appointed president of the famous Whampoa Military Academy, which transformed eager but sentimental youths into men equally well versed in the science of killing men and molding their minds.

Dr. Sun died in Peiping in March, 1924. His death served as a signal for a bitter struggle between the extreme left and the conservative wings in the Kuomintang, the ruling party. Out of that struggle Chiang emerged as the dominant leader and on July 10, 1926, was appointed to head the Canton National Revolutionary Army, which was soon to sweep the country. In January, 1926, reports allege, Borodin and his aides committed the unpardonable mistake of slighting Gen. Chiang. The split became so serious that Borodin found it necessary to leave hurriedly for Tientsin the following month. In March, acting without authorization from the party, Gen. Chiang's forces suddenly descended upon the Communist labor unions, disarmed strike pickets and certain army units and deported a number of Russian advisers.

The muddle became even more impenetrable at the end of April, when Borodin unexpectedly returned to Canton, accompanied by Mr. Hu. Early in May Borodin was appointed supreme adviser to the Canton government, and Gen. Chang's aides responsible for the raids on leftists, were imprisoned. Hu himself fled to Shanghai. Yet, a few days later, Gen. Chiang, opening a session of the executive committee, bitterly assailed the Communists and forced through a ruling restricting the number of radicals holding Kuomintang posts.

The march northward met with signal success, thanks largely to the host of Soviet-trained agitators who preceded the army. Hankow was captured in September, and three months later the Cantonese government and Borodin transfered their headquarters to that city. Overnight Hankow became the center of a Communist web covering most of China. Workers were organizing themselves into unions and peasants were killing the leech-like landlords and officials. Foreign nationals fled to Shanghai, where American, French, British and Japanese troops were "making the Civilization's last stand."

However, unfortunately for the foreign capitalists, the Communist revolution was heading for a rock. The breach between the leftists and Gen. Chiang was widening with every mile that was bringing his armies nearer to Shanghai. As soon as Gen. Chiang reached Shanghai, in the last week of March, 1927, he began negotiations with Chinese financiers for a loan enabling him to launch a counter-revolution.

The bankers and merchants, badly frightened by the specter of communism, were willing to help Gen. Chiang. So were the landlords throughout Central China, who have seen their lands confiscated by inflamed peasants. So were the foreign governments, to whom a Communist revolution in China was tantamount to the beginning of what Moscow calls the "World October." The required millions were supplied.

The results were instantaneous On April 18 a new government, unostentationsly devoted to the restoration of Dr. Sun's principles to their original purity, was established in Nanking. A few days later a reign of anti-Communist terror was instituted in all major cities. All labor unions were suppressed, workers' and peasants' units were disarmed and disbanded, and thousands of men and youths suspected of radicalism were shot and strangled throughout China. In Canton a few Russians, including the vice consul, were set upon sharpened bamboo poles.

In July, surrounded on all sides by hostile forces, disheartened Borodin and his aides left Hankow for Soviet Russia. In August the rival factions within the Kuomintang were reconciled, with the way paved by resignations of Gen. Chiang and Mr. Hu. And while his colleagues were wrestling with the problems of state, Gen. Chiang went a-courting Miss Soong Mei-ling, one of the famous three Soong sisters. Before the year was over the two were married in the ballroom of a Shanghai hotel, to begin a life that brought worry, honor and important achievements to both.

Early in 1928 Gen. Chiang was once again in the political saddle, this time as the unquestioned head of the national government. Except for a brief interval in 1930, he remained in that position ever since. During these eight years he weathered at least four civil wars, the occupation of Manchuria and North China, the Sino-Japanese hostilities in Shanghai in 1932, and innumerable introgovernmental crisis.

Rebellion Crushed.

Only three months ago he was confronted by a revolt of his bitter foes, the southwestern warlords. Through the judicious use of silver bullets and an impressive demonstration of his might, Gen. Chiang forced the flight of Gen. Chi-tang, the Cantonese chieftain, to his palatial mansion and safe-deposit boxes in Hongkong. Less successful was he with the Kwangsi warlords, who, protected by mountains and well-trained troops, forced numerous concessions from the generalissimo. One of these, reliable reports assert, was a promise to resist Japan's imperial designs in China. This pledge came to haunt Gen. Chiang in his negotiations with Japan.

Gen. Chiang's foes were innumerable. The leftists bitterly accused him of ruthlessness in suppressing all liberal trends. The workers complained against the suppression of a genuine labor movement. His political opponents openly charged him with maintaining a personal "Gestapo," the Blue Shirts, who stopped at nothing, murder inclusive, to square accounts with his rivals. Still others found fault with his close union with the Chekiang financial clique, which foot his bills, the landed gentry, the reactionaries.

The intelligentsia assailed him for his opportunism in dealing with other warlords and with Japan. Nipponese generals charged him with a "lack of sincerity." Gen. Chiang, some said, used his office to enrich himself, often by very unscrupulous means. In short, Gen. Chiang was China's most abused public figure.

Upheaval Forecast.

Yet, few doubt that his sudden death will result in an unprecedented upheaval, which will retard the nation's development by many years, perhaps decades. Gen. Chiang was an enlightened warlord, who, through a masterful blend of the orthodox "tuchunism" with methods borrowed from Soviet Russia and the Reich, succeeded in achieving his ends. He came to power on the wings of revolution, which itself was the child of domestic misery and foreign moral and material assistance. He entrenched himself in power by organizing a strong army and a powerful air force, by gaining the condence and assistance of the bourgeoisie, and by a superb diplomatic ability.

But, withal, he also made enormous contributions to national welfare. For in these last months peace and order returned to a major portion of the country. A thoroughly modern government, of whose officials are dedicated to public service, has been established in Nanking. China's financial status has been immeasurably improved, drastic financial reforms have been carried out, and her currency has weathered a number of international financial cyclons.

The Chinese, hitherto clannish beings, were transformed into nationalists conscious of their latent strength and past heritage. Gen. Chiang's "New Life Movement," although possibly not as deep-rooted ideologically as it should have been, has resulted in vast civic improvements. The process of national unification has been a powerful impetus.

Goodspeed Gave $48,925 to G. O. P.

By the Associated Press.

Total contibutions of $48,925 to the Republican organization by C. G. Goodspeed, of Chicago, during the recent campaign were reported to the Senate Campaign Funds Investigating Committee yesterday.

Other large Republican contributions included $16,000 by G. A. Tomlinson, Cleveland industrialist and top figure in the Van Sweringen Railroad System; $10,000 by Walter C. Janney, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; $9,000 by Max Epstein, Chicago; $5,250 by Mrs. Coleman du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., and $7,851 by Albert A. Tilney, New York.

Among the larger Democratic contributions were $4,025 by Grenville T. Emet, of New York, and $4,977.50 by Jack J. Spalding, of Atlanta.

In proclamations dropped on insurgent lines from government airplanes, the defense junta invited the Fascist soldiers to "surrender, with your arms if possible."

Rome, Dec. 15 (AP).—The civil war in Spain may cost 1,000,000 lives, Mgr. Goma y Tomas, Archbishop of Toledo and primate of Spain, said today in the Catholic newspaper, Avvenire d'Italia.

The published interview aroused keen interest, since it was assumed the primate's opinions were those that he conveyed to Pope Pius during a recent audience. Prelates said the cardinal would not have granted such an interview unless he had obtained Vatican consent.

"Never in history has there been so barbarous a war," the newspaper quoted his eminence. "The atrocities are indescribable.

"Precious art treasures have been destroyed. Unheard-of violence has been directed against priests.

"Two women were brought to trial at one place. One boasted she had killed six priests; the other, 19.

"It is not a political conflict in the strict sense of the word. It is a war of principle, of doctrine, of one concept of life and society against another; one civilization against another."

The Fascist insurrection, he added, barely staved off a Communist coup d'etat. The latter, he said, had been planned for five years.

Volunteers of America Map Christmas Plans

Christmas plans of the Volunteers of America call for distribution of hundreds of baskets of food and hundreds of pairs of new shoes, it was announced yesterday by Lieut.-Maj. H. Mills Eroh, division commander.

Each basket will be packed especially to meet the Christmas dinner requirements of the particular family to which it will be given. The shoes will be given to needy school children on recommendation of the authorities.

Louis Ottenberg, 815 15th St. N.W.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE United States for the District of Columbia. American Refrigeration Co., Inc., a corporation, 1731 Fourteenth street northwest, Washington, D. C., Plaintiff, vs. Roy Frank Denner, R. F. D. No. 1, Lincoln, Mo., Defendant. At Law, No. 88183. The object of this suit is to obtain a judgment against the defendant for $2,730.27 with interest from October 13, 1936, besides costs, and to have judgment of condemnation of certain property of the defendant levied on under an attachment issued in this suit to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. It is, therefore, this 15TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1936, ordered that the defendant appear in this Court on or before the fortieth day, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the day of the first publication of this order, to defend this suit and show cause why said condemnation should not be had; otherwise the suit will be proceeded with as in case of default; provided that this order be published in the Washington Law Reporter and The Washington Post once a week for three successive weeks. By the Court: JOSEPH W. COX, Justice. A true copy. Test: (Seal.) CHARLES E. STEWART, Clerk. By RICHARD J. KIRKLAND, Ass't. Clerk. 14,23,30

WPA Rolls Reduced In 3-County Area

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 15.—The national policy of cutting WPA forces was brought home to Berkeley, Morgan and Jefferson counties this week with from 50 to 75 relief and nonrelief workers being eliminated from the WPA pay rolls in the three counties within a short time, it was disclosed at the area office here.

This number represents about 6 or 7 per cent of the persons drawing WPA checks in these counties. The dropping of the workers has been gradual.

WPA Official Resigns.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 15.—John B. Archer, district WPA supervisor in this division of operations with headquarters in Elkins, has announced his resignation, effective today. He will be succeeded by H. T. Haberstick, of Wheeling, now on duty in Charleston.

Miners Warned Industry Seeks 40-Hour Week

By the Associated Press.

The soft-coal industry notified the United Mine Workers last night that they would be asked to increase their work week from 35 to 40 hours after March 31, with no increase in wages.

Strike talk started immediately in coal circles here. The miners have been generally expected to ask for a 30-hour week or a pay raise—or both—in the wage agreement to replace the present contract that expires March 31.

A reduction in the industry's wage bill, operators told the miners in a letter, was necessary to place the industry in a more favorable competitive position with other fuels.

2-Year Pact Urged.

They suggested the next agreement run for two years—until April 1, 1939—and provide the same wage scale now effective. Pieceworkers, they said, would make more under this agreement than under the present scale.

The letter was signed by the members of the Appalachian Operators' Negotiating Committee, J. D. A. Morrow, Pittsburgh Coal Co.; L. E. Woods, Crystal Block Mining Co.; L. T. Putman, Raleigh-Wyoming Mining Co.; D. A. Reed, Consolidation Coal Co.; P. C. Thomas, Koppers Coal Co.; Ezra Van Horn, Ohio Coal Control Association; M. L. Garvey, Pocahontas Fuel Co., and Charles P. O'Neill, United Eastern Coal Sales Corporation.

Losing Business Claim.

The effect of miners' wage increases since 1933, the operators' letter said, has been to raise the industry's total wage bill by more than $250,000,000 a year.

This increase, the letter added, was "pleasing" to the industry, but "has not produced a situation that permits a growth of the production of bituminous coal."

"At present, the industry still is losing business to oil, gas and hydro-electricity," the letter said.

"When the operators first entered these agreements with the United Mine Workers of America they had every reason to expect that competitive conditions with other sources of power would be changed so that bituminous coal could fairly compete for its proper proportion of the business of the Nation, but this has not been done."

New Cabinet Post Is Rumored Again

The report that the Administration will recommend to Congress establishment of a welfare department in the Cabinet combining relief and welfare activities of the Government was revived yesterday, together with the suggestion that Harry L. Hopkins, head of the Works Progress Administration, might be named head of the department.

Speculation on the possibility of such a step was revived as the time approaches for a report of the Senate committee and a special group named by President Roosevelt on Government reorganization.

Movie Refereendum.

Waynesboro, Va., Dec. 15 (AP).—Citizens will decide the question of Sunday movies in a referendum here on January 5. The town council by a split vote of three to two last night passed an ordinance prohibiting Sunday movies but added an amendment making the measure effective in event voters so decree.

Lap Full of Joy for D. C. Youngsters

Mrs. Dryden Rites To Be Held Today

Funeral services will be held in Bernardsville, N. J., tomorrow for Mrs. Grace Carleton Dryden, 61, mother of John F. Dryden, of 2412 Tracy place northwest, president of the Investors of Washington, Inc.

Mrs. Dryden died Monday at Stronghold, her Bernardsville estate. She was the widow of Forrest Fairchild Dryden, president of the Prudential Life Insurance Co.

Born in Bradford, Mass., Mrs. Dryden was educated at Abbot Academy at Andover. She was active in civic organizations and was finance chairman of the Women's State Republican Club of New Jersey during the recent political campaign.

Surviving, besides her son, are two daughters, Mrs. Newcombe Chandler Baker, of Rumson, and Miss Elizabeth Butterfield Dryden, of Boston, Mass. and a sister, Miss Clara L. Carleton, of Bradford, Mass. She also leaves six grandchildren.

Science Called to Help Identify Burned Body

Wildwood, N. J., Dec. 15 (AP).—State and county police, checkmated at the moment by a scarcity of clews, planned today to draft all possible scientific aids in determining the identity of the woman whose badly burned body was found stuffed in two seed potato sacks.

The body was little more than a skeleton with bright red polish giving a macabre touch to toe and finger nails. It suggested to some investigators that the victim had been a dancer.

Explosion Victim Reported Better

Seriously injured Monday afternoon when a gas explosion wrecked the kitchen of her apartment at 3516 W street northwest, Mrs. Beatrice Bean, 23, daughter of Senator Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, was reported improved in Georgetown Hospital last night.

Meanwhile, investigators believe the explosion the result of a spark from an electric refrigerator which ignited the gas.

Mrs. Bean, a bride of six months, was found lying on the kitchen floor. Four jets on the stove were lit, police were told. The burners, police said, could have been ignited by the flames from the explosion.

At Georgetown Hospital Mrs. Bean was treated for severe burns and shock. Physicians said she has an even chance for recovery.

E. W. Pharr Dead; F. P. C. Examiner

Edgar W. Pharr, 48, an examiner for the Federal Power Commission, died yesterday in Sibley Hospital after a relapse which followed an appendicitis operation. He lived at 2901 Sixteenth street northwest.

Mr. Pharr came to Washington in February of 1935. He was formerly speaker of the North Carolina House of Representatives in which he had served several terms.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Ruth Pharr, two daughters, Charlotte and Jewel Pharr, a sister, Miss Mary Pharr, two brothers, Ernest and Hazel Pharr and his stepmother, Mrs. W. S. Pharr.

Funeral services and burial will be Charlotte, N. C., his birthplace.

Girl Asks Post Toy Fund Help For Youngsters

Letter One of Many Telling of Deserving Families in Need of Aid.

"I don't care about myself, for I understand I can't have any Christmas. But my sisters and brothers don't know Stanta Claus will forget them . . So won't you please help me?"

Helen is only 13 years old. But her letter to The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund shows she bears a grown woman's burden in caring for her two sisters and two brothers. And this Christmas Helen's responsibilities are doubly hard—trying to play Santa Claus when the family already has trouble in paying for rent and food.

"I have two sisters and two brothers, and I am writing this letter for them—asking if you will please be so kind and help me to give each one of them a toy for Christmas," Helen's letter to the Toy and Doll Fund continues.

"The two girls would like so much to have a doll apiece. And one of the boys is 11 and the other 3. They will be thankful for whatever you will give them.

"Father has been out of work for the last year on account of his illness and just went back to work three weeks ago and only makes a very small salary and he doesn't see how he can get the children any toys for Christmas. So won't you please help to make the smaller children happy. I don't care about myself——"

Many Moving Letters.

The story of this little girl, whose 13 years already make her look at younger brothers and sisters as "the children," is only one of the moving letters that yesterday's mail brought to The Post Toy and Doll Fund.

Another letter, from Northeast Washington, is from Norman, 12 years old, and his 7-year-old sister, Norma. Their father is dead; their mother has been sick and unable to work for over a month.

"We were expecting Santa Claus to come to our house this Christmas. But we were very much disappointed when mother told us that he would have to pass our house by because she had barely enough to live on till she could get back to work."

And from a family in Southeast Washington comes the tragic tale of a widowed mother whose $10 a week barely take care of her six children. Twenty-five dollars a month goes for rent, leaving only $15 to clothe and feed seven people for a whole month.

"My young son said to me the other day, 'Mother, is it going to be like last year and the year before?' He is an ambitious youngster, and told me, 'Mother, if I was old enough to work and could get it, you wouldn't have to worry.'"

The mother that writes this letter has already known abject poverty. For months she has tried to get work. And Christmas Day holds little promise for her, or for her three children.

Signing herself "A Friendly Neighbor" a Post reader writes the Toy and Doll Fund of a family on northeast F street: "The mother is in the hospital expecting a new baby. I know they have no money—scarcely enough to eat. They have another child of 4. I know this child will be very disappointed at Christmas when they are unable to buy her any toys. I have talked to her; all she wants is a singing cradle. I will send her a doll, but unfortunately I am not able to give more.

"Perhaps you could help them."

Many Washingtonians have already helped such deserving families as these. Toys and dolls have come into The Post Fund in gratifying numbers. And cash contributions—to buy gifts for more of these youngsters—now toal above $300.

But it will take many additional toys and dolls and games—both old and new—to see that Santa Claus makes a thorough trip through the District. The be-whiskered old gentlemen will need a lot more help if thousands of youngsters are not to be disappointed Christmas morning.

Everything sent in to the toy and doll fund goes directly into making a merrier Christmas for every child in Washington. The Council of Social Agencies is distributing the gifts and maintains a workshop where old toys and games are repaired and repainted.

By calling DEcatur 5130 you can arrange for a Terminal taxicab to pick up you gift without charge. Or if you are near one of the 42 People's Drug stores throughout the city, leave your gift in the special box in each store. Gifts are also collected from special baskets in Loew's Capitol, Columbia and Palace Theaters.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., Dec. 15.—More than four truckloads of toys, books and foodstuffs were contributed Saturday toward the Christmas celebration of the needy of Waynesboro and vicinity at a benefit theater party. The party was attended by 1,500 children. John B. Stoner, manager of the Waynesboro Welfare Association, is arranging distribution of the gifts.

Farmer Dies of Poisoning.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 15.—Henry Fitz, 86, retired farmer of Highfield, Md., died from the effects of paris green which he told a physician he had taken. A son, Harry Fitz, with whom he lived, found his father ill in the cellar.

Yes, with the Holidays coming on, with festivity on every hand, you too will want to dress up and get in the swing of things. We can think of no easier way than with the casual nonchalance of a smart-looking British Lounge V-8. It is that something different for men who insist on comfort, good fit and fine appearance in their clothes. The longer jacket, lower tapered waistline, broader angled lapels and extra fullness at chest combine to create, for the wearer, an illusion of breadth at the chest and shoulders, slenderness at the hips, a taller appearance and greater comfort. It is a model that is suprisingly flattering to most men.
